MR. HARDING'S "PARTY REGULARITY"

Those supposedly "party men"—and women, too—who find occasion now and then to deplore the tendency of other party men and women to be loyal to political organization belief and principle, even though individual desires and ambitions cannot always be served by thus doing, may well study this statement, which Arthur Sears Henning makes relative to President Warren G. Harding:

"In 34 years of political life, the president has supported the choice of republican conventions and primaries without question, and with that regularity which—in his opinion—would have been more wholesome for the country had it been more general."

No one who is acquainted with Mr. Harding's political career during the last 20 years will say that he ever lacked fixed and positive opinions on any issue with which his party was concerned in any campaign. Nor will any well informed person charge that he failed to use his influence fully on every occasion to win success for his beliefs. When that was done, however, Mr. Harding's habit always was to accept the result, and to abide by it. He had confidence in the fairness and judgment of his fellowmen because of his knowledge of the justice of his own sincere views. A man must have unusual confidence in his position to be willing to submit it to the verdict of later years when the present rejects it.

This course lost him nothing in power to serve his party and his country. It would be nonsense to say that had he at all times insisted upon having his way or deserting his party, he would still have had a good chance to be president of the United States and respected and trusted by all the world. He believes intensely in majority rule, believing thus, he shapes his acts at all times to conform to that principle.

No such ideal is cherished by the "bolter," the so-called "independent," the chronic "scratcher" of the election tickets of his political party. He puts his own judgment and his own ambitions above the experience and the wisdom of the thousands, the millions, of men and women composing his party. The chances are that he is in error more frequently than he is right.

The "bolter" of republican tendencies might well ruminate on Mr. Harding's belief that had others of his party followed more generally to his own course in being willing to accept majority sentiment as republican expression of party attitude, the country would be better off today.

AMERICA IS NOT MISERLY

Thomas B. McAdams, president of the American Bankers' Association, told Kansas bankers in convention in Wichita, that the United States must not be allowed to become a miser nation. "As we despise the men who hoard his money and lives to himself," he said, "so will we be classed by the nations of the world if we try to keep aloof from them and refuse to help solve their problems, which are in fact our problems."

Mr. McAdams is not alone in his opinion. There are many others who favor American participation in European political and economic affairs for humani-tan reasons. But this view is not shared by the American people. If, for example, the cancellation of European political subjects to referendum, there is little doubt that after the votes were counted Europe would still be in debt to the United States. Public opinion at the present time favors European recovery through European effort. The American attitude is not that of a miser—recent relief projects indicate that The American vision has never been tardy in extending aid to suffering peoples of Europe, but he is decidedly reluctant to favor official participation in European reconstruction, because that reconstruction, being a matter of government regulation, involves relationship of a nature this country, in recent years, has been careful to avoid.

America has been confronted by inconsistencies in European policy that she cannot reconcile. The allies, it is reported, have considered seriously a loan to Russia. That loan would have been paid by American money, because the countries that would have extended it are indebted to the United States. Nearly all European countries are spending far more for standing armies than they did before the war. They may have reasons for this, but the average American will never be able to understand why a bankrupt man should clutter up his premises with a superfluity of firearms.

The policy of America is not, therefore, one of parsimony. It is merely one of non-participation in affairs that are not her concern. It would be fine for the United States to play the part of an international Kriss Kringle, but even old Kriss, it is remembered, does not leave presents for children who behave badly.

PRESIDENT HARDING NOT TO BE COERCED

One can applaud the announcement which comes from the White House that President Harding will not yield to that form of duress which was practiced upon President Wilson, known as picketing the White House. The statement is emphatic that "no program of picketing or parading would ever influence the opinion of the executive office." Furthermore, the president of the United States has a right to be freed from annoyance. He is the executive of the whole people, and needs all the strength he can husband to serve them. There is a proper way to approach the president of the United States. The strong arm method and the bulldozing tactics of a crowd of ruffians should be put under the ban of the law.

In this instance, however, the picketing was to be done by children of men who were sent to jail during the war and afterwards for disloyal acts committed when the country was at war. They are either guilty or innocent. They are in jail only because they were found guilty by a court; they will not remain longer in jail than they can establish by proper methods their innocence, if they can do so. There are thousands of men and women all over this country who have the suspicion very strongly that there are more persons out of jail today who should have been in for disloyalty than are inside.

This is a democracy, with laws and orderly procedure. No democracy ever endured that permitted mob methods to prevail, and picketing and other demonstrations are mob methods, pure and simple.

In the case of the children, they are mere tools in the hands of older and designing persons, whose activities during the war probably were of at least a doubtful character. That President Harding, like the rest of us, has the highest regard for children, is beyond the question, but it is not the custom to pardon persons convicted under the law because of the sentiments of their children. The predicament of their parents who are in prison, not of the president and not of the courts.

But we like the tone of the president's statement. It means that no noisy and rebellious group, resorting to mob tactics and bull dozing methods can go to Washington and by making a nuisance of themselves force a president of the United States, from mere weariness, to do that which is against the wishes and hindered to the welfare of the entire country.

It is time something were done about it and done right.

CEREALS PROVE GREAT INTEREST IN CALIFORNIA

Varieties First Tested By U. of C. Previous to Being Distributed

(By Associated Press)

DAVIS (Cal. June 10)—A survey of the state just completed by Prof. G. W. Hendry of the University of California, shows 534,000 acres of varieties of cereals tested at the university farm have been planted this season as follows:

Marion barley, 350,000; Tennessee winter barley, 200,000; Bunyip wheat, 40,000; Yolo 20,000; Four Thousand barley, 10,000; Honey sorghum, 7,500; Select Milo, 5,000; Federation wheat, 1,500.

All of these varieties first were tested on the Davis trial grounds, prior to distribution, and found superior in yield to previously grown kinds. They are estimated to have added about $6 an acre to crop value, or a total increment of $3,501,000. This amount, capitalized at 4 per cent, represents a permanent agricultural endowment of $85,100,000, Professor Hendry figures.
