Wood for Sale.

I will sell wood, as good, and even better, than any in Carson, two-thirds red fir limbs, and one-third split yellow-pine (mixed) at $7 per cord. A reduction of fifty cents will be allowed to parties taking five cords or more at one time. I have also a quantity of nut-pine and cedar, which I will sell at proportionately low figures. Terms strictly cash on delivery. D. CIRCE.

Croup—Ammen's Cough Syrup.

Ammen's Cough Syrup is not a patent medicine. No patent has ever been asked for or been obtained upon it. To protect the public from counterfeits and imitations the manufacturer had the label registered at Washington. The Syrup is from pure and costly drugs, and cannot be sold as cheap to the dealer as the common patent medicines that are simply made to sell, which explains why dishonorable druggists or dealers try to sell you something else when asked for Ammen's Cough Syrup. It is upon the market upon its own merits. You can buy a sample bottle for 15 cts., upon which, at the wholesale price the manufacturer makes nothing. Ask to see a large bottle, and read the label.

Bounced.

It is reported on the Comstock that the famous Dick Dey, as familiar in Legislative times as Stephen Gage, Esq., is no longer in favor with the Bonanza powers. Rumor has it that Dick settled up the other day and drew out of the bank $12,000. The presumption exhibited on the part of an employe hauling down so much money at one time was too much to stand. It was unprecedented, or rather not customary exactly. It should have gone in the last deal in Sierra Nevada. We think Dick lost caste when our Governor vetoed the Penalty bill. We understand that Richard has joined his first love again, that good old man, Judge Mesick.

The Savage Crowd.

Tuesday's San Francisco Post contains the following: The monotony of a dull but remarkably firm market for the Comstock shares was somewhat relieved this morning by the news, which quickly spread along the curbstones and permeated the inner sanctuaries of the brokers, that Maurice Hoefflich had started in bright and early on the first of a new month to wrest the control of the Gould & Curry mine from Senator Fair, Alvinza Hayward and others who are now in charge. Mr. Hoefflich is ambitious. It seems as if it were only yesterday when he captured the control of the Savage mine from "the allied powers," after a hot struggle. Savage has since become an active stock; has quite an influence on affairs. There are good prospects in the upper levels of the mine, where a large quantity of medium grade ore is being stoped out for the mill. Gould & Curry is the adjoining mine on the north, and its chances for developing a good body of ore, if properly worked, are said to be good. At least, this is what Maurice Hoefflich thinks, and according to his statements this is one of the reasons why he has entered the lists for the control. Associated with Hoefflich in the present struggle are H. M. Levy, L. T. Lazare and others who were with him during the fight for the control of the Savage mine.

Martin Luther's Brother.

A Bostonian who has returned from a trip abroad relates a funny incident of his travels. While at Frankfort he started out one day to find the house in which Martin Luther once lived, and which, according to the guide book, is located in the Dom Platz (or Square of the Cathedral) and has a bas-relief likeness of the celebrated reformer on its front, with a Latin inscription underneath. He was accompanied by a young Jewish lawyer from New York, who could speak German. On reaching the Platz a scrutiny of all the buildings failed to reveal the bas-relief, although the conclusion was reached that the Martin Luther house must be one of two which formed the corners of a street leading from the square. A man and woman were standing in a shop door a few steps down the street. The young lawyer went to them and asked if they could tell which house it was that Martin Luther had occupied. The woman spoke up and replied: "There is no such man lives on the street, but I know his brother, who keeps a beer saloon around the corner." Of course no further inquiries were made in that quarter. On returning to the square another search was made for the elusive bas-relief, and it was happily discovered. The dense ignorance of the two denizens of the neighborhood was made more conspicuous by the fact that at the time they were standing directly opposite the rear end of Martin Luther's former residence. The old question was naturally suggested, "What is fame? Strangers, living more than three thousand miles away, were seeking a memento of a man famed throughout the world, who yet was unknown to some of his countrymen, who must almost daily have seen his likeness on the house in which he formerly lived.—Boston Journal.

In the interest of the paper makers, the engravers and the printers, it is to be hoped that capitalists who are engineering this syndicate for the purchase of the Confederate notes will not lose heart in their enterprise. During the rebellion nearly half the volume of the money of the Confederacy was counterfeit. It was made in this and other Northern cities with the tacit consent of the authorities, who looked upon its manufacture and circulation as one of the most effective blows at the rebellion. The only difficulty found in passing it was that it looked too good to be genuine. This is the money which the foreign speculators should by all means purchase. The counterfeit is far better than the genuine article.—Stockton Mail.

Another postal thief has been brought up with a round turn. He was only a clerk. The Star Route rascals have not yet been much bothered by the authorities.

THE WHITE HOUSE.

Changes and Repairs That Are Being Made.

Extensive changes are being made in the interior arrangements of the White House. Heretofore the army of callers upon the President have swarmed around the door of the President's private office and filled the corridors and halls. If the attention of the doorkeeper was distracted for a moment and the President's door should open, one of the hangers on the outside could dart in. Several times have men forced themselves into the presence of the President, and they have also been an annoyance by loafing around the door. It is the intention to have everything done in a more orderly manner. The large room in the front of the house where Colonel Crook and Mr. Morton had their desks is now being fitted up exclusively for a waiting-room. Seats will be provided here, and the visitors will be shown to this room and from there send in their cards and wait until the President wishes to see them. The wide corridor has been partitioned off, the partition being partly of glass and partly of wood, and the room thus formed on the east side will be used by the clerical force. The telegraph and telephone instruments have been moved into the room on the northeast corner, which was used by the Garfield boys as a study. The new room formed from the corridor will give the clerical force the additional space which was so much needed, and, beside, the entire presidential office will be in a connected series of rooms. All the rooms are being cleaned and brightened up, new paper is being put on the walls where needed, and the furniture is being re-varnished and upholstered. The paper and envelopes used in the official business of the President is very deeply edged in black, and instead of the printed heading "Executive Mansion," there are the words "Office of the President of the United States: Official." This heading will be retained as more appropriate than the former. The communications in regard to receptions, social and private matters, come from the Executive Mansion, but public business from the office of the President. The private part of the house is also being thoroughly overhauled, and the President is not expected to occupy the house until December.

It is stated that a larger number and greater variety of ideas can be conveyed, with more exactness, in a given number of words in the English language than in almost any other. This is strikingly shown in the matter of telegraphy. It has been demonstrated that for all telegraphic purposes the English language is from 25 to 33 per cent. cheaper than the French, German, or any other language.

It is said that England proposes to sell Gibraltar to Spain, but that is scarcely probable, as Gibraltar is the key to the Mediterranean, and the mistress of the seas would not be likely to give up such a stronghold.
