THE IRISH CONVENTION.

The Largest Body of the Kind Ever Gathered in America.

CHICAGO, May 7.—The gathering in Central Music Hall on Saturday evening was called to ratify the actions and methods of the Philadelphia Convention in the formation of the Irish National League of America. On the platform were members of the State judiciary, the Mayor of the city and other distinguished gentlemen in addition to the new President of the League. The audience was not lacking in enthusiasm, and some sentiments expressed were loudly applauded.

Judge Thomas A. Moran of the Circuit Court bench presided, and in accepting the chair pointed to the fact of the inability of Ireland to acquire relief through the agency of the English Parliament, and spoke of the unfair representation granted the Irish people in that body. He asserted that the only hope for Ireland lay in a sentiment which would eventually actuate the entire American nation, and which would compel England to give Ireland favorable legislation.

Mayor Harrison said Irish freedom would have to be won this side of the Atlantic, not by throwing bombs, but by the force of American opinion favorable to Irish freedom. Congressman George R. Davis said the honest sentiment of America was irretrievably with Ireland in her struggle for liberty, but he warned his hearers that any attempt to organize rebellion this side of the ocean, to be carried on by indirect methods, would alienate the sympathies of this people.

SPEECH OF PRESIDENT SULLIVAN.

Alexander Sullivan, the new President of the Irish National League, was the last speaker, and his remarks, in view of his position, were closely listened to. He was greeted with a storm of applause. In the course of his address, referring to his personal character, which had been commended since he was raised to the head of the new national organization of Irishmen, he said: "I have known what it is to have enemies. It is just, however, that I should say that many who became so on mistaken impressions of the circumstances, have since become, on hearing the truth, my warmest friends. For those who remain my enemies in spite of the truth, and who would be the enemies of any man of my race, I have only that indifference which becomes a self-respecting man." Proceeding to other subjects, he said: "The great convention which assembled at Philadelphia was

THE LARGEST REPRESENTATIVE BODY

Which ever came together in America to deliberate upon the condition of Ireland, and to take such action as would, in its judgment, best promote her welfare. It was essentially an American body; American in the simplicity and straightforwardness of its proceedings; American in its quiet, sturdy behavior; American in the wide view it took of political ideas; American in that it owed and properly boasted its first allegiance to the constitution and laws of this republic, and American in its desires to extend the blessings of that constitution to its enslaved mother land." He contended that the Philadelphia platform had secured the enthusiastic approval of the American press, without notable exception, and that it has won for Ireland, to a degree hitherto unattained, the sympathy of mankind. "Yet," said the speaker, "for such is the condition of Ireland today, if such a platform were put forth by a similarly constituted body in Dublin, the entire assemblage would have been marched under military escort from the convention hall to the most illustrious abodes the English government has ever conferred upon Irish patriots, the jails. The platform declares in a word that henceforth

THE IRISH RACE IN EXILE IS UNITED

In its determination to aid our countrymen in their struggle for self-government by whatever method they think best for the achievement of that end." Continuing, he declared it was his purpose, in carrying out the wishes of the convention, to make the masses of the American people informed of the truth about Ireland, and when they understood the reasonableness of her claims they would be united in their support, and their will, properly expressed, the powers of the British empire could not withstand. He contended that the method England had most successfully practiced against Ireland was by misrepresentation in asserting that the land was over-populated and emigration a necessity. Yet the population is only 167 to the square mile, while in Germany it is 213, and in England and Wales 445. "It is said," continued the speaker, "that Ireland, being only an agricultural country, cannot support herself. It is true, comparatively speaking, she has no manufactures, but who destroyed them? The English government, that Ireland might be

THE EXCLUSIVE MARKET

For English manufactures. It has been said Ireland is without capital, and that a country without capital cannot maintain a self-government, but we shall tell the American people how her capital of Ireland is drained from her by the sale of her land, and when they understand the reasonableness of her claims they would be united in their support, and their will, properly expressed, the powers of the British empire could not withstand. He contended that the method England had most successfully practiced against Ireland was by misrepresentation in asserting that the land was over-populated and emigration a necessity. Yet the population is only 167 to the square mile, while in Germany it is 213, and in England and Wales 445. "It is said," continued the speaker, "that Ireland, being only an agricultural country, cannot support herself. It is true, comparatively speaking, she has no manufactures, but who destroyed them? The English government, that Ireland might be people are ignorant; but who destroyed her schools? Who made learning a crime? Who, by force, reduced an entire people to illiteracy

IN THE NAME OF RELIGION AND LAW, That they might be more easily kept in subjection? Its representatives have never proposed a definite plan of self-government. Much indeed their candor would have availed in a foreign Legislature from which they have been repeatedly expelled whenever they attempted to compel its attention to the wants of their country. But we shall print a record of bills, eminently just and wise, and notoriously necessary, which the Irish members have offered in that body only to see them contemptuously thrown out, generally with the poor compliment of a second reading. Americans who read the record will have a new appreciation of the necessity of giving Ireland a Legislature of her own. It is said that Ireland is lawless. We shall use the statistics of the English bureau to show she is far less so than England. In a word, we have fastened the attention of intelligent Americans upon English misgovernment in Ireland, and we intend to keep it there. I may be asked what precedent does history contain for justifying the hope that the moral power of mankind will aid struggling nationalities? I will go no further back than to mention Greece, Hungary and Montenegro. But mark, fellow-countrymen, no country has ever been helped thus that did not first help itself. Go on then, Irishmen, with your organization, bring all your societies promptly upon the platform, and under the banner of the Irish National League. Continue as of old your noble work of benevolence, temperance and charity. But when we work for Ireland, we work on one platform, under one banner, by one method, and with one aim—that of national self-government. He declared that an inaugural statement, with much interesting additional matter, would be placed in their hands at an early day. At the conclusion of Sullivan's speech the meeting was closed by the audience rising and joining in the chorus "God Save Ireland."
