SATURDAY'S HOMICIDE.

CURLEY HOGAN'S BRAINS BLOWN OUT BY WILLIAM CROW.

An Old Family Feud Settled by a Pistol Shot.

At 8:30, on Saturday evening, a pistol shot rang out at Sweeney's corner, and a moment later, parties coming out of Sweeney's saloon found a man lying on the walk with a bullet through his brain, and William Crow running from the spot and making for a horse which was close at hand.

At first the noise of the shot attracted but little attention, as the 4th of July celebration had been in progress all day, and it was several minutes before the crowd in the vicinity realized that a man had been killed.

CROW CAPTURED.

There was a rush made for Crow and he was captured as he was about to mount his horse, and was taken down the street amid cries of "Lynch him," "Lynch him."

Better counsel prevailed and he was taken down to the Jail, a large crowd following him. When asked by the officer what had happened, he replied:

"Oh, I don't know."

HOW IT OCCURRED.

There are several versions of the killing, and those who saw it are very reticent. The generally accepted one is that Hogan was sitting on the bench North of the saloon in a state of maudlin drunkenness; some say that he was almost asleep, when Crow, stepping up behind, placed the muzzle of the pistol close to his head, just back of the right ear, and fired. Hogan fell forward to the ground and must have died instantly.

The bullet ranged downward and came out of his mouth. He was taken up stone dead, and removed to Sam Wright's undertaker shop.

CAUSE OF THE KILLING.

The trouble which led to the shooting took place in Washoe county two or three years ago. The Crow and Hogan family have adjoining ranches and had been in litigation over water. The Court decided the matter giving each family a portion on certain days of the week. One day Hogan and the boy who was then but 19 had an altercation over the matter. The boy was struck on the head by a shovel wielded by Hogan. He put up his hand to guard against the blow and had a thumb and one finger almost cut off. The blow also inflicted an ugly wound in his head.

Some claim that Hogan beat the boy terribly after cutting him with the shovel, and another version is that the boy made the first attack and the wounds were inflicted while Hogan was warding off the boy's blows. The boy after the affair said to Hogan: "I will kill you if it takes twenty years." After that there was a deep feeling of enmity between the families which grew deeper as time went on.

Another version of the trouble is that Crow attacked Hogan with a rock and when found by him was taking water which a court had adjudicated to Hogan. Hogan was acquitted for assaulting the boy. The reports relative to Hogan's disposition differ very materially. Hundreds of rumors are in circulation regarding the origin of the trouble and nothing definite will be known until after the inquest.

A MOTHER'S CURSES.

The Crow family claim that the blows received by the boy injured him mentally and subjected him to trembling spells of melancholy and fear. He could never be induced to again approach the spot where he was injured.

Frequently the mother and the boy would meet Hogan and falling on her knees before him would call down the curse of heaven upon his head. Whenever he had occasion to pass the house she would go out in the road, fall on her knees and curse him as he passed.

THREATENING CROW'S LIFE.

The friends of Crow say that on Friday Hogan saw Crow in a lane near the house and told him that he had a great mind to kill him then and there. It is also alleged that on Saturday Hogan told Crow that he would kill him before the sun went down. This it is claimed so worked up his mind that he secured a six-shooter and committed the fatal act.

Hogan's friends deny that he ever threatened his life. Hogan was the man who about a year ago shot and killed the County Recorder of Storey county, it was claimed accidentally. He had a six-shooter on his person when the body was taken to the morgue.

Crow who is now in jail refuses to talk with anyone. The inquest will be held today.

THE GLOVE MATCH.

Williams Knocked Out by a Water Pail.

The glove match between Williams and Slattery on Saturday, at the Opera House, was a queer affair.

Just as the audience got wound up to a high pitch of excitement over the prospect of the pit being deluged with gore, Constable Furlong made his appearance and inspected the gloves. He simply remarked "Too thin," and ordered the fight "off."

He said the gloves weighed but three ounces, and that the authorities did not propose to allow any brutality at glove matches.

Slattery protested that they were all right, and that he had used the same in several knock-outs. Williams said he would go out in the satebrush and fight, London Rules, with naked fists.

While the wrangle was going on the audience testified their disapproval of the intervention of the authorities by a fusillade of chaff, which the official took good-naturedly.

Finally it was agreed to use the regulation boxing gloves. When they were brought the audience began to yell: "Oh! look at the pillow cases;" "Bring on some feather beds;" "Where are the liver pads?" etc.

Both men were stripped, and in the first round Slattery led viciously and following Williams to the ropesent in a volley of blows which knocked him through. As he fell he went down on a water pail made of galvanized iron and the projection to which the handle is joined entered his groin inflicting an ugly wound. He came to the scratch but feeling that he was bleeding badly left the stage and the fight was given to Slattery.

J. F. ADAMS KILLED.

Run Over by the Cars and Both Legs Taken Off.

On Saturday afternoon J. F. Adams employed in the V & T R R yard as a wheel-tapper was run over by the cars and both legs taken off. Those who saw the accident state that he was attempting to climb a freight car by the iron ladder at the side. He had just swung himself up when his foot and hand slipped at the same time and he fell under the wheel. The car was loaded and both wheels passed over his legs below the knee severing them from the body. He was taken into the depot where he was completely out of his head and raving in agony. His legs were amputated by Dr. Lee in the vain hope of saving his life. He lingered until 5 o'clock Sunday afternoon when he passed out of his miseries. He leaves a wife and several children who are inconsolable over their terrible affliction.

glare of the electric light of the newspaper, sheltering itself under the sacred name of Religion; ay! proclaiming its doctrines through the very trumpet of Liberty herself, grows and festers that foul thing called polygamy. A thing as much more repulsive than its prototype of Oriental lands, as poverty and squalor and publicity and all the anomalous conditions of western civilization can make it. This strange disease exhibits many of the symptoms of a moral cancer, and we must beware. Let, like its physical counterpart, we find that even the knife prove powerless if we delay too long. Doubt not, retribution follows a nation's sin as surely as that of the individual and the time may come when our children must pour out their blood to atone for their father's sin, and within the memories of nearly all within the sound of my voice, has already once been done for the righting of a long-suffered wrong. In that awful day of reckoning, neither of the great political parties will have the right to point its accursed finger at the other and cry, "Who art the man?" for both will be equally guilty.

To-day, on this 110th anniversary of our national existence, the Sun, as he has driven his fiery courses across this continent, has beheld an Empire, in every attribute of strength and grandeur, unparalleled in the world's history. He has beheld one continuous pean of joy and gratitude ascending on high to the voices and hearts of sixty millions of people. He has beheld an undivided country, stretching over an hundred degrees of latitude, whose inland and independent commerce extends over a network of iron paths and waterways, greater in extent than is enjoyed by any two of the older nations of the earth. He has beheld the unbounded products of our fields and factories increasing as the years roll down, until they very suffer the markets of the world to cry "stop!" He has beheld the oceans with their twenty-two thousand miles of coast, serving as bands of peace and union, and not as paths of war between us and the nations of the earth. He has seen our mountains whose surface sustains unnumbered flocks and herds, and whose mines send forth largesse to feed the avarice of the world; our valleys stretching from the Arctic to the Gulf, teeming with the fruits of every clime. He has looked upon our institutions of learning lifting the people to the light of a nobler manhood; our church-spires pointing upward from every village, and his beneficent radiance falls like a benediction upon us as he bids us bow our heads and join in a worshipful, a holy and a happy prayer of thanks and gratitude to the Great Giver of all good that favors, the like of which before have only been read of in story, are so accorded to us.

Mr. Daggett's poem has not yet reached this office. It will appear in the Enterprise.

A high wind prevailed all day, materially interfering with a perfect celebration.

Base Ball.

The Chloriders beat the Amateurs on Sunday; 10 to 9, for a purse of $200. It was a fine and exciting game.

The Resolutes of Virginia beat the Chloriders yesterday; 18 to 14, for $100. The yells of the spectators could be heard to Empire.
