THE MINING EXCITEMENT.

What is Being Done at the North Carson Hill.

An average of a dozen locators a day go out to the hill North of this city to make locations. The ground from the Sugar Loaf to the railroad track for a mile and a half is covered with monuments and location stakes. These locations are most numerous near the Sugar Loaf mountain, where the croppings of dips and spurs of the ledge are plainly visible. Some locators have gone beyond the Sugar Loaf and are tracing the ledge toward Virginia City from that point.

The mountain seems to have been thrown up by a convulsion of nature and cut the ledge squarely in two. A wall of slate cuts off the croppings of the South West side, and another on the Northeast.

The late Prof. Stewart always insisted that the Comstock, after being lost and scattered at the South end, continued again toward Carson and ran into the mountains. He wrote and talked of this theory years ago, and published a treatise in the papers in support of this idea. As the rock so far produced from the newly discovered ledge is identical in character with the Comstock, this theory now has many supporters, although the geological ledge is not the same topographically as the Comstock.

The rock first struck in the well was free milling ore with sulphurets of silver. The rock now being taken out of Chedic and Biglow's claim near Sugar Loaf mountain is yellow rock, honey-combed and decomposed like Chollar ore, with free gold plainly to be seen. Their shaft is now down on the ledge 18 feet, and the assays which began at $4 a ton on the croppings have increased to $80 a ton, with the ledge increasing from about ten inches to two feet wide.

The Bray claim Southwest of this, produces a similar rock, in which the free gold can be plainly seen and picked out. No assay has yet been made, Bray contenting himself with pounding up the rock and horning out the gold. Over a dozen locations have been made on the croppings of ledges, all of which give assays of more or less value, and the geological indications are that these spurs all unite in a main ledge at greater depth.

McLoughlin & Hawkins are now down over a hundred feet with the boring machine, and working to reach the ledge, which Norrie estimates will be reached in the neighborhood of 225 feet. The first strike, 300 feet Southwest was at 260 feet.

The men who own locations along the ledge are anxiously watching the results of the second boring, and yesterday offered to run the boring machine all night by building sagebrush fires to work by. The offer was refused, as it takes considerable experience to run the machine so as to avoid breakage.

At present the ground is soft and easy to sink in after the hard pan is penetrated, but at about two hundred feet the old well encountered a harder formation, and not over ten feet a day were made, and the clay formation before the ledge was reached was more like rubber than clay, causing the drill to rebound several inches.

Many of the old prospectors pin their faith on the existence of a ledge beyond the railroad cut, as several fine prospects have been found there, and free gold has been many times washed out of the ravines Northwest of the city.

Several parties have already begun to give a false value to their claims by doctoring the assays. One man sent a piece of rock to Virginia City, which went $5.85, it being a piece of the croppings of his location. He placed the figure 1 along side the $5.85, making $15.85, and attempted to sell his claim on the strength of it. Such work as this always does more harm than otherwise, and when discovered excites a general distrust of the whole proposition.

The Most Agreeable

DR. HARMON'S BIG SALE.

A Lesson to Carson Business Men.

To-morrow Dr. Harmon leaves for Virginia City. During his three weeks stay here he has taken in over $1,500 cash. He made the money selling Brazilian Pebble spectacles of a very superior quality. Now it is a well known fact that several local dealers in this city have just as good pebble spectacles as Dr. Harmon, though as a rule the flint glass spectacle is sold in preference, because it is cheaper.

Carson like any other town is full of people with ailing eye-sight who by paying the price could have procured just as good glasses of local dealers, but they did not choose to and the $1,500 in glasses goes away.

Now Dr. Harmon's skill as an optician is unquestioned, but with all his great skill and superior appliances he was unable to do any business in this city until he began to advertise his goods lavishly in the newspapers. He stirred the parties up daily in the papers and as a result had more business than he could conveniently handle.

One man who paid $5 for a pair of pebble glasses was informed by a local dealer that he would have furnished the same kind for the same money.

"Sorry I didn't get 'em of you, but the fact is I didn't know you had 'em."

Of course a great deal of Dr. Harmon's trade came through advertising in the APPEAL. Receiving advertisements from one who has announcements to make is the regular business of this paper. But we would rather see the local dealer do the advertising and make the money.

People will pay $5 to $10 a month for local advertising and think that is quite enough, but Dr. Harmon spent over $100 for advertising in three weeks and his profit must have been nearly $1,000 in that time.
