WATER STORAGE.

How it Works at the Nevada Land & Cattle Company's Ranch.

The Nevada Land and Cattle Company were the first, and, as yet the only ones, in Nevada to adopt the water storage system. The company expended a large amount of money in building dams and making canals, but the experiment has proved eminently successful, and this year, when the scarcity of water is universal throughout the State wherever people relied on the natural flow of streams for irrigation, the N. L. & C. Co., have a large supply in their reservoirs. This they utilize principally in irrigating alfalfa, and they expect to stock, at least, 4,000 tons of hay, raised on sagebrush land, which a few years ago, did not produce enough grass to the acre to keep a jack-rabbit in good condition. It is greatly to be hoped that the water storage system will be generally adopted where the country will admit of it, as it would transform thousands upon thousands of acres of land, now practically valueless, into green meadows and waving grain fields, and insure good crops in dry seasons like the present.

The Water Question.

There is a howl among Sweetwater ranchers about the scarcity of water. One of these days it will come into their heads that storage reservoirs are a good thing to have at this season of the year.—Enterprise.

The farmers do not seem to be able to learn anything about the water question.

The Arkansas man would not mend his roof in rainy weather because he could not work in the rain and in pleasant weather, he would not mend his roof because he did not need any roof then.

The Nevada rancher is the same way, in the dry weather he has no water because there is not enough to go round and he goes to Court to fight for that very uncertain thing in this State known as a "water right" and in a few years he has the experience and the lawyer has his farm. Now if the farmers of Nevada would consent to a tax of so much per acre on their land to construct reservoirs, they could build the reservoirs and have the water at about one tenth the cost of crops they lose every Summer, besides saving the cost of useless and vexatious law suits.

In the Winter however when the Legislature meets, there is no need of any water, and the instant anything comes up before the honorable body that is going to cost anything, everybody gets frightened and the members are implored by letter and telegraph not to vote for any bill that is going to cost anything and so the penny wise and pound foolish economy goes and will go on until a new crop of people get hold of the State and lift it on its feet.

The Warren's Anniversary.

The Warren's Anniversary last evening drew a large crowd at the Opera House and was a very enjoyable affair.

The hall was handsomely decorated and the committee on refreshments had done full justice to their duties.

As the APPEAL goes to press the revelry and the passing of the was-sail bowl is still in order with songs and good music.

MRS. LOGAN FOR ALGER

The Governor's Qualities Exalting by the Dead Senator's Widow.

CHICAGO, June 14.—Speaking of Governor Alger, Mr. Frazer of Detroit said: "The nomination of this convention must be a good Republican, a tried statesman and a brave soldier. That is the kind of a man we propose to offer. Michigan has no second choice."

Mrs. John A. Logan has entered the canvass for Governor Alger with her old-time energy, spiced with a tinge of bitterness toward other candidates. This new element is likely to create a good deal of bitterness, and it has already brought consternation in more than one delegation.

Mrs. Logan, on her arrival at the Grand Pacific Hotel, was waited upon by the members of the Chicago Veterans' Union and given a hearty reception. She had a word and a hand shake for every old soldier.

In speaking to the newspaper men, who crowded about her she paid a high tribute to Governor Alger, and said "he has always been honorable in his dealings. People say he is unknown. The reason for this is that he has not antagonized anybody. He has not abused any of the other Republican candidates. This is more than can be said of some of the other candidates in the field. I am fair enough to believe that Blaine is honest, but I think he is out of the race."

"What do you think of the chances of the party?"

"My opinion may not be worth much, but if Alger be nominated he will be elected. He is strong with the soldiers, and a safe, careful, honest man, who is true to his friends. A man who is true to his friends can be relied on for his country."

REBELLIOUS CAMP-FIRES.

Gen. Johnson Blows the Smoldering Coals.

Confederate Memorial Day in Baltimore furnished Gen Bradley A. Johnson, of this city, and formerly of Virginia, with an opportunity to make a red-hot rebel speech. A number of ex-Confederate soldiers were gathered about him at the cemetery. After praising the Confederate cause and the valor of the Confederate soldiers he said:

"The South is progressing: she is not dead. These old Confederate soldiers and their descendants elect ninety out of every 100 Congressmen, thirty-four of the United States Senators and President of the United States. [Applause.] The Government of the United States is controlled by Confederate soldiers. It is always the case, that when you get in a place to command respect, you will get respect. These old Confederate soldiers are not idle."

Gen. Johnson roused his hearers to enthusiasm again when he declared:

"The men who were with us after our flags were scattered all over the States of this Republic stood by their firesides and altars, and braved the storm of battle and defeat, and to-day you can reckon on the fingers of your two hands the deserters from the Confederate cause after these long twenty-three years. [Applause.] Look at those men from Robert Lee down to the humblest private in the ranks, and you cannot find twenty who have turned their backs on their old comrades. [Applause.] They have faith in their cause.

If you stand by your guns you will yet have a voice and hand in the Government of this country. [Applause.]

Rolled When Drunk.

A few nights ago J. P. Uren a Gold Hill blacksmith came down to Carson to have a little jaunt when he got a little hilarious and discovered in a short time that some one had rolled and robbed him. He stated yesterday to a reporter that he hired a man in Virginia City named Polkingham to drive him down and that the two slept over night at Peterson's hay yard. Here he claims that Polkingham robbed him of $75.

He also stated that he had telegraphed to Virginia to have Polkingham arrested.
