LAKE NEWS.

The Lumber Business—An Inquisitive Tourist.

Few people, even in Nevada, have an idea of the immensity of the lumber business being carried on at the Lake. At the Incline, wonderful engineering feats have been accomplished, and the water system is one of the grandest and most intricate in the world.

Long, snake-like flumes bend and swerve in and out of the rocky canyons, lined by thick hedges of quaking aspen trees and apparently solid banks of foliage.

The old-time dry chute can be seen all along the roads, but it has nearly gone into decay, to be succeeded by the more civilized methods, railroads, etc.

At Sand Harbor Chas. Blethen is still yanking the throttle in his little narrow-gauge engine, which he somehow manages to keep as clean as a new dollar. He hauls 75,000 feet of logs each day, (including Sundays) to the saw mill at the Incline.

On the 12th a raft containing 250,000 feet of lumber arrived, and inside of six months will probably grace many of the principal streets of some thriving Western city.

A barge carrying 45,000 feet of lumber is in readiness for the planing mill at Hobert, and will, no doubt, be taken over today.

At all points is noted the same lively condition, and many improvements in the manner of getting the material in shape.

In speaking of the Incline it will be well to know who the joker is there.

A well dressed stranger got off the boat recently, and enquired of Charles McFarlin what attractions the road to Carson furnished.

Miss wandered away in a long description of the beauties of nature and the grand views, winding up with a suggestion that a trip through the flume tunnel, a mile long, would be particularly interesting, though containing few scenic effects.

The tourist immediately hired a cayuse and struck out for the flume. When he arrived he tied his horse near by and the globe trotter plunged into the depths with a tallow candle.

The first hundred yards was plain sailing, but the top of the tunnel seemed to do considerable leaking. Still he went on; so did the leaking.

Finally the candle went out and the roof became lower. By this time his back was nearly broken by the cramped position he was compelled to walk in. On he plunged, getting madder every step, until he reached daylight at the terminus.

Several loud remarks were made at this juncture, which could not be caught distinctly, but he walked over the hill back to his horse, and after wringing out his clothes started back with a statement concerning a gentleman named McFarlan, whom he was very anxious to see.

Fred Brault, sent from Ormsby for assault to kill, was pardoned. Adjourned till 10 A. M. today.

Sunday morning a fire in Candelaria destroyed a saloon and two other buildings. One of the buildings was used as a lodging-house, and some of the men who were sleeping in it had a narrow escape. Loss about $3,000; no insurance.

THE RENO TRACK.

In Such Bad Condition that Horses Come Here.

Charley Leeper has gone to Carson today to see about moving his stable of horses there for training. He says the Winters flyers will also be taken to the track at that place. Mr. Leeper says that the State Society has had a man ordered to put the track in order and that it pays him $40 per month.

Mr. Leeper claims that the man so hired has done but one day's work on the track and the balance of his time has been put in rubbing race horses. Mr. Leeper says he has repeatedly called the attention of the officers of the society to this matter and all the satisfaction he has been able to get was "we will see about it."

If the society expects horses to train and enter the fall races they should be willing, and indeed anxious, to put the track in shape so that an animal could be galloped without danger.

The Car son track is said to be in good fix for training.—Gazette.

The Obstinate Family.

There is always an obstinate person in a family, and not unfrequently more than one. Occasionally a whole family is afflicted with the trait of character peculiar to the human race.

Last evening the local theatrical talent of the city gave a very funny exemplification of this peculiarity, in a farce comedy known as "The Obstinate Family."

The plot turns on Lucy, the maid, (Miss Bender), refusing to say, "Thank goodness, the table is spread." All in turn refuse to do so, and a regular old-time family row results.

Mr. Harwood (E. B. Zabriskie), played the head of the family. Mrs. Harwood (Miss Yerington), acted the consoling mother-in-law.

Mr. Harford (Mr. Colburn) and his wife Jessie (Mrs. Webster) took a hand in the row, and Mr. H—l-mann, of Virginia, acted the manservant.

All the parties to the row and the subsequent reconciliation acted in first-class shape and kept the large audience in the best of spirits. Each of the performers got a round of applause as they came on, and it was the general verdict that the audience enjoyed it more than they frequently do the traveling shows.

A delightful musical program was rendered as follows: Duo, Mrs. Bender and Mr. Barney; song, Dr. Richardson; song, Miss Buckley; trio, Mrs. Bender, Mrs. Caputa and Miss V. French.

After the performance there was a very jolly dance.
