THE NEVADA EXHIBIT.

F. H. Norcross writes to the Journal regarding the Nevada exhibit as follows:

Nevada has never been considered an agricultural State and many there are who even believe the soil incapable of producing anything; but when they enter the Nevada pavilion and see what Nevada soil and Nevada climate really does produce, it is a revelation to them. Even then many doubt that Nevada has produced all that is shown there. Here were exhibited the first figs of '93, a week before California could produce her earliest, and California claims everything in the fruit line. Mr. Yerington says that visitors are constantly asking him how he bleached his sheaves of oats and wheat to make them look so white and silvery, and how he dyed the alfalfa to make it keep so green. He can hardly make them believe that it is only Nevada's soil and climate that makes them so. The Nevada pavilion occupies a portion of the space Idaho would have had, had not her exhibit been consumed by fire while in transit. The floor is 26x24 feet and is surrounded by wooden archways about 12 feet high and a railing about 2 feet high, around the outer edge of the floor. The entrances to the pavilion are from the north and over each entrance is the seal of the State.

The side arches are very prettily draped with orange colored Japanese silk, and bunting of the same color while the wood work is every where ornamented with rows and bunches of wheat and alfalfa, oats sagebrush and other Nevada products. In the center of the pavilion is a long pyramid and this is covered with the exhibits of the different varieties of grain in little wooden boxes with glass tops, or in glass bottles; also potatoes, fruits and vegetables. Surmounting the pyramid is a large sheaf of oats which is the most striking thing of the kind in the entire building. This sheaf is the drawing card of the Nevada display for nearly every one that goes by the aisle that leads from the exhibits of Great Britain to that of Nevada and Utah, sees this beautiful sheaf. They go down to get a better look at it and see what else there is to be seen there. Around the side of the pavilion are little tables and on these are shown fruits and vegetables. There are also small bales of alfalfa, timothy and wild hay and to the surprise even of Nevada people, a bale of cotton. Mr. Yerington's headquarters are in this pavilion. He has arranged it so that he can entertain his Nevada friends there when they visit the exposition. It must be mentioned also that much of this exhibit is from the agricultural experiment station and the eight panels on which are placed many varieties of grain and other products of the station, calls forth much favorable comment. Professor McDowell is deserving of no small share of the credit of this showing.

In the arranging of this and also the other exhibits, Mr. Yerington has been ably assisted by Mr. William Shirley of Dayton. As the season advances Mr. Yerington is desirous that the different agricultural products of the State be sent him. He wishes quality and not quantity and it is to be hoped that the people of Nevada will lend him all the aid they possibly can to make the exhibit as great a success as possible.

The appropriation by the State was very small and none of the money of Nevada's wealthy men has offered any financial assistance, as has been the case in many of the western states, so it has been necessary to use the strictest economy.

But everything that is worthy of exhibition will be transported free of charge to the exhibitor.

Mr. Yerington is also distributing some literature concerning Nevada where it will do the most good. He has on exhibit maps of the state and blue prints, showing the water courses. Reports of the surveyor general, and weather bureau; maps in frames showing the temperature, etc; speech by Hon. F. G. Newlands on irrigation and the Resources of California's edition for Nevada. The Illustrated Columbian, the great world's fair paper, has offered for $320 to give illustrations and three pages of printed matter concerning Nevada and 2,090 copies for distribution. This is a good offer and it is to be hoped some of the public spirited men of the State will take steps toward raising the necessary money.

Those who have exhibits to send will direct them to James A. Yerington, world's fair commissioner, Nevada exhibit, section C, agricultural building, Jackson Park, Chicago, Ill.
