Charley's Aunt.

After announced successes in London, New York, Boston and various other places "Charley's Aunt" will be presented at Carson December 26th.

The principal personages figuring in the farce are three college boys, of whom two, Jack Chesney and Charley Wykeham are in love, one with the niece, the other with the ward of an avaricious solicitor. In order to induce the young ladies to take tea with them at the college, the young men send invitations to the young ladies to take tea with "Charley's Aunt," who is expected to arrive at Oxford that day. On the non-appearance of the aunt, the other collegian, Lord Fancourt Babberly is persuaded to impersonate that relative who has never been seen in Oxford even by her nephew. The aunt being reputed a millionaire, the masquerader receives gallant attentions from the solicitor and from Sir Francis Chesney, the father of Jack. Of course the affair is complicated by the later arrival of the real aunt, accompanied by a ward who is a former sweetheart of Lord Fancourt. In trying to carry out the part of "Charley's Aunt" on such short notice and without any previous instruction, and being further embarrassed by the presence of the real aunt's ward and by the attentions of the two elderly suitors, Lord Fancourt involves himself and his friends in the most ridiculous position until the whole story is straightened out in the third act. Many of the situations are obviously forced; much of the fun is little better than horse play, but the play has a number of really strong and humorous scenes. Do not miss seeing it.

Not Parallel.

There is no use talking, but something will have to be done with Germany unless she treats our products better. She has shut out the American beef and the American quilled hog, and now she has a proposition pending to shut out cottonseed oil. The fact is, about the time the trusts got the high protective tariff system to work to suit the wealthy of this country, Germany went to practicing it herself and knocked their plans into a cocked hat. High protection is very satisfactory to the protected classes in this country, when practiced by us, but when others practice it against us, it is the very personification of low-down meanness and small-minded piggyishness. The policy of protection, when practiced by others, is destructive of commerce and the common good; but when practiced by us—well—that's not a parallel case!

Another Contest.

Fred Wilson began a suit in the District Court Saturday afternoon to contest the election of Commissioner McAfee in the Northern District. The complaint is quite a voluminous document, but, simmered down, the plaintiff contends that at the general election held on Nov. 6, he received 179 votes for County Commissioner for the short term, all but five of which were legal votes, and that defendant McAfee received 190 votes for said office twenty-eight of which were illegal.—Elko Independent.

Fell and Broke a Leg.

About 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon Adam Uhl, employed at the Lafayette Market on North Ch Street, while carrying a sack of grain from a wagon to the shop, slipped and fell, breaking the small bone of the left leg a short distance below the knee. The accident will confine Mr. Uhl to his room for a few weeks.—Chronicle.

Adam's many friends here will be sorry to hear of his accident.

Turkey Shoot.

Don't be a sucker. You will surely be a sucker if you fail to take in Wiggins' Turkey Shoot next Sunday at Empire. Wiggins has had a special correspondence with Foster the weather sharp and Foster says he will "pull" for good weather Sunday and Christmas day.

Wiggins has had to hire an extra man to take care of the turkeys. They are so fat that when they fall over the man has to go along and stand them on their feet. One of his largest birds fell over Monday and nearly perished in the storm, being unable to get up.

The chickens have been trained to stand with their feet on the ground, the way that the shot may enter easier.

The dance on Christmas eve will be one of the best ever given in the Riverside town and Wiggins has two men employed waxing and smoothing the floor.

The Bowen Inquest.

New Orleans, December 19.—The Coroner's Jury which investigated the death of Andy Bowen has returned the following verdict: "That death was due to hemorrhage caused by a concussion of the brain," and the jury finds further that there was neglect on the part of the club in not having the ring padded.
