Trying Times.

Because a sleepy compositor mixed up an 'h' with a 'k' in the report of the Inaugural Ball yesterday a very charming and intellectual young lady is reported as being at the Ball dressed in a black "shirt" instead of black skirt. It is on occasions like these when an editor wakes up in the morning, reads his paper and then goes about instituting inquiries among his friends to ascertain whether he is afoot or horseback, and gets home in the evening without being able to ascertain anything about it.

Merely a Suggestion.

EDITOR APPEAL:—Can you tell me why a horse always turns his head to the right after you put a bridle on him? Also can you suggest a remedy for such action on the part of the horse.

LEM ALLEN.
Try cloves for your breath.

Schenck, who died January 7, has been filed by Emma Axford, at San Jose, the daughter, who, according to the will, is the sole legatee of her father; but strangely no estate can be found by the Public Administrator and where it is gone an investigation will have to reveal. The value is set down in the petition for probate as "unknown," but it is said to amount to several thousand dollars.

Gentry, the man who murdered his sweetheart, Miss Madge York in Philadelphia a few days ago, is now the lion of fashion in that city. Women send him flowers by the armload, together with photographs and cologne. The mawkish sentimentality is remarkable. Friends are paying for his private attendance and money is flowing into Gentry.

A theatre company is said to be the next attraction.

Times seem to be improving at Bodie.
