Effect of Flowers. Flowers have undoubtedly a refining effect. In respect to the homes of the people, the advent of an enthusiastic lover of flowers into a neglected neighborhood has often been followed by emulation which has gradually resulted in the transformation of the garden plots of the neighbors and the corresponding improvement in the appearance of the dwellings. The direction of men's minds toward beauty in Nature must of necessity tend to wean them from tolerating ugliness in whatever form, and in some degree aid in their artistic and even ethereal uplifting.—Register, Adelaide.
