The Remedy. The Hon. B. H. Hill has recently made a speech at the Jones' of fair, in Georgia, which should be widely circulated and read. "Without a great change," said he, "the southern states are destined to become so many plantations, practically owned by the northern people, and the southern people so many hireling slaves to work them, the poorest, the most powerless and the most contemptible of earth's inhabi-tants." The remedy, he says, is:

From present appearances, the cotton planter do, who planted to the growth of sprouts of the cotton planter do.

Now, I affirm, it is cheaper for you to raise your own provisions than to have them brought from the west and given to you at the nearest depot free of all cost and charges! How is this? In the first place, if we raise five millions of bales of cotton, we will get no more money for them than we would get for half that number. Then, out of the same amount realized, you pay for raising the five million just double cost of production! Killing Pawpaws.

On our warm, rich soils this shrub has been a source of constant trouble, especially in pastures. I have heard so my experience. Last summer a farmer told me if I would cut them down three years in succession in August, that it would kill them effectually. If he bad said the dark of the moon in August, I should have doubted the whole thing. But I have always been in the habit of his theory, only pawpaws are such in-veterate spronters even when grubbed, that I had come to the belief that there was no way getting rid of them. scythe; and now, though this spring and summer has been unusually wet and can a cotton planter do, who plants on credit and borrows money to buy his provisions. But, you say the western states can raise provisions so much cheaper than we can that we can make more money by making cotton and buying from them. This is the teaching of figures, and a greater lie was never taught.

Now, I affirm, it is cheaper for you to raise your own provisions than to have

If it were not for gardens it is hard to tell how many quiet, elderly, moderatekitchen and paths grape-vines spread in long and devious ways. Much time is spent in keeping all these in order, but long and devious ways. Much time is spent in keeping all these in order, but more time in the planting and care of vegetables. Sheltered as the ground is, every thing starts early; cucumbers are in the rough leaf before young men on poorer soil get theirs above ground, and corn is ready to hoe before others plant. The old gentleman is up in the early morning stirring the ground, and killing weeds, and inhaling the pure fresh air, while he thinks of days past, and dead friends, or muses, perchance, upon the future life, wondering, it may be, if in that unknown land there will not exist employment of some kind connected with the growth of plants. While the teakettle is simmering the old lady steps out for a few minutes to see if new peonies, or roses, or pinks, or lilies have come forth in the night, or if insects have committed ravages. After breakfast they both appear again, and many are the hours they spend with their pets and friends. Thus their summers pass peaceful and contented. All this is not "practical," but we happened the other day to witness just such a scene, and we believe there are thousands of our readers who will find the picture true to life,—New York Tribune.
