At this place, the rain commenced to fall steadily about I o'lock P. THEY are beginning to count the cost now. George Alfred Townsend, in a letter to the Chicago Tribune, puts it this way: "No man, not a negro, can make any more reputation out of the slavery question. This na-tion of white men has paid a fearful price per capita for the freedom of the slave. It has paid for, say, four million slaves, the sum in money of two billion six hundred milion dollars, or about six hundred and fifty dollars per head, in debt alone, bearing inter-est—the same the duster race would have cost bought up the nation without losing a life. Such a piece of profligacy is war. A great war represents the wastes over and above a settlement of its issues. It is the cost of the obduracy and the passion. the demagogery, and the lying, and the cheating of the suffering side."

THE London Athenaeum thinks the truth about Dickens' separation from his wife is that, "after three-andtwenty years of married life, he was weary of the wife of his youth and middle age. He could make no selfapplication of the old adage, bear and forbear! He had no real fault to were creatures of their own imaginafind, but there was a dreamy idea of tion, and their influence was strongly his having missed some imaginary being whom heaven had, perhaps, designed for him; and, having made a skeleton for his closet, he saw it, in his mind's eye, growing like the hell which placed on every mountain some which placed on every mountain some met in the 'Castle of Ouranto.'
