[Editorial correspondent of N. Y. Courier.] Where the Trout Flourish. We have been to Coudersport. How to get there, and where it is located, was graphically told by a correspondent of the Courier, last Summer. He also furnished our readers with a very reliable description of the trout-streams in its neighborhood, not overlooking the claims to notice of Glassire, the expert fisherman, and pleasant landlord of the Coudersport hotel.

On the 21st of August, we were dropped at the mouth of the stream, and were carried by a lumbering vehicle—said vehicle getting over thirty miles of rough and dusty road in about ten and a half hours. Our programme embraced the following arrangements. Firstly, to meet the writer who introduced Coudersport to our notice; secondly, to cultivate the acquaintance of Glassire; thirdly, under his guidance, to visit the stream in the vicinity, and become initiated in the science of trout-capturing, and finally to go to French Creek, and camp out in the woods for a brief period.

All of which was pleasantly carried into effect, except the latter clause, the comforts and delights of the Coudersport hotel, outweighing the attraction of beds made of hemlock boughs, and amateur cookery. The first day's sport indulged in by three of us, resulted in the capture of about eighty fish, and we were led to believe that the following statement will award credit where it properly belongs.

Glassire, 73 The Doctor, 4 The writer, 3 Total, 80 Glassire's "mess" was a splendid collection of trout; the Doctor's though few in number, were of good size, and the balance consisted of a diminutive club, and two infantile shell fish of the lobster persuasion.

This was our initiation. The next day, being Saturday the 28th inst., and the party being completed by the welcome addition of our expected clerical friend, we started for the Sinnamohung, reaching which we were dropped about one mile apart, with directions to fish down the stream and meet at the wagon for lunch.

The day opened splendidly, and the ride through the magnificent country of wooded hills had put us all in superb spirits. As our friends drove off we made our way to the stream, and endeavored to follow the directions we had received. We experienced the usual annoyances that attend the efforts of the novice. Our hook would fasten itself into the limb of a tree, or a rock in the stream; or the line would become entangled with the undergrowth, and rotten boughs would crush under our feet with startling noise, frightening the timid fish. Still we persevered. We worked our way into a dense forest of hemlocks; we waded in the stream; clambered over huge logs; tripped over slippery and treacherous stones, taking involuntary baths—until we were startled by the mutterings of an approaching thunder-storm. It came.

"All right," we thought, "fish be better when it rains." And how it did rain, let that little party tell. For two hours the water poured down in solid columns, and the scene when lit up by occasional flashes of lightning was gloomy and grand beyond description. We look back with becoming complacency, as we recall the fortitude with which we endured the ordeal. It was "toots" we believe, who upon being told of the ship wreck of Walter Gay, enquired of that adventurous young gentleman, "if he didn't get very damp?" and when the storm was over, he said, "I can't say I'm any better, but I don't get any drier."

Again Glassire was ahead, about three hundred per cent, in the number of fish he had caught, over the rest of us. We, as a recompense for our unusual toil and fatigue, had secured one fish—just this time, it was a territorial trout. Home to get dry clothes, a trout supper, and an early bed, to prepare us for the proper observance of the day of rest.

On Monday, we revisited the Sinnamohung, and our experience was very similar to that before described—including the shower—though with an improved show of fish—the doctor, emerging from the novice to a well-approved expert, and our clerical friend and the landlord creditably holding their own.

Our visit to Coudersport was in every particular a delightful one. Its people are kind and hospitable, and the climate invigorating and healthy. Its jail is without inmates, which proves that the horse-thieves and counterfeiters with which this section of the country was formerly infested, have fled to other shores.

Beffalo and Washington R. R.—There has been two companies in existence—one in this State called the Sinnemohung Portage R. R. Company, with a charter for a road from this place to the State line, and the other called the Buffalo and Washington Company, with a charter for a road from Buffalo to this State line.

On Thursday last, the Directors of the Buffalo and Washington Road, and committee appointed by the Directors of the Sinnemohung Portage Road, held a meeting at Olean for the purpose of consolidating the two companies, and determining upon the route. The consolidation was agreed to and has since been ratified by the Directors of the latter company, and a third company organized under the name of the Buffalo and Washington R. R. The route decided upon was from Buffalo to Olean, to cross the New York and Erie Railroad within half a mile of the Olean Depot—up the Allegheny river to Port Allegany, and from thence to this borough. Another meeting of the Directors will be held at Eldred, McKean county, on the 8th of September.—Commonwealth.

Nothing is more to be desired than a good appetite, and to have the food digest well, the stomach and bowels must be in perfect order, which renders good health certain and enduring. When the appetite fails, the stomach is sour and foul, the bowels in an abnormal condition, take Coo's Dyspepsia Cure at once. It is a most excellent medicine, gives great satisfaction and is sure in its results whenever taken according to directions. We bid our friends try it with confidence.

From some items in the last Union Republican we are convinced that the gentleman from Clinton county who said that D. S. Dunham was a "mean, lying, blackguard," told the truth.

None who suffer from the disorders they cure, such as Headache, Pains of the Stomach, Bilious Complaints, Constipation, Heart-burn, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Worms, and Suppression, when taken in accordance with the directions, are ever again troubled with them.
