(Special to the Star-Independent.) Altoona, Pa., Oct. 14.—Dr. Brumbaugh returned to Blair county yesterday after an absence of eighteen days. Flinn and Quay Clash

Philadelphia, Oct. 14.—William Flinn had a sharp exchange of verbal "hot shot" with his former co-worker under the sign of the "Bull Moose," Richard R. Quay, in the lobby of the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel last night. Then he was content that it should be inferred that he was doing all in his power to bring about what was regarded as politically impossible, the withdrawal of Representative Palmer in favor of Gifford Pinchot.

The points in the foregoing, the "withdrawal" and the "hot shot" are related because of the fact that it was in the course of his encounter with the son of the late Senator Quay that Flinn gave an intimation of his movements in the direction of obtaining fusion against Senator Penrose.

Mr. Quay and Mr. Flinn are both of Pittsburgh. Until recently, when Quay denounced Flinn as a political "trader," Quay was one of the former Senator's chief lieutenants in the Washington party. Their meeting last night was the first since Quay renounced his political allegiance to the Washington party chief.

Quay told Flinn to his face what he has been saying about him in statements to the public. Retort followed retort. And yet each was satisfied at the close to describe it all as "pleasantry."

But in the course of this "pleasantry," Flinn told Quay, according to the latter, that he thought Mr. Palmer would withdraw as the Democratic nominee for United States Senator, and so perfect union between the Democratic and Washington parties.

Talk of Further Fusion

The Anti-Penrose Republican League of Pennsylvania, an organization formed for the purpose of obtaining publicity for Gifford Pinchot, yesterday announced that petitions had been received from a number of persons urging that Representative A. Mitchell Palmer, Democratic nominee for United States Senator, withdraw in favor of Pinchot, the Washington party nominee. The league's statements asserts that there is a widespread demand for Mr. Palmer's withdrawal. However, friends of Mr. Palmer said there was not the slightest possibility of his withdrawing, and suggested, instead, that if there be any withdrawing Mr. Pinchot is the logical man for that move.

Announcement of important fusion on State Representatives in this city and the probability of fusion in two State Senatorial districts, with the likelihood that further results of the kind may be obtained in Philadelphia and throughout Pennsylvania, yesterday centered political attention on the fight independents are making to prevent the Republican organization from controlling the next State Legislature, and more particularly the next State Senate.

EARLY MORNING SURPRISE IN BATTLE OF MORIN

BRITISH INFANTRY DISLODGING GERMAN DURING BATTLE OF MORIN. COPYRIGHT 1914 BY N.Y.H.

The retreat of the Germans across the Morin at one time looked like a flight. The fighting in the little town of La Ferté Gaucher was one of the severest character. Here the Germans desperately attempted to make a stand against the victorious advance of their enemies. They were, however, driven from La Ferté with great losses, and they were severely attacked by the Allies and compelled to retire on to their second line on the Petit Morin. Here, likewise, they were severely attacked by the Allies and compelled to give still further ground. After the fighting on the Petit Morin the German commanding officers realized that the one hope for them was across the Marne and the Aisne. A rapid retreat was decided on—guns, ammunition, wagons and other war materials were at places abandoned owing to the pace of the movement. During this retreat the Germans were harried by both British and French soldiers, who were now tasting the joys of a rapid and victorious advance. In many villages British soldiers came up before the Germans had time to fly, and sanguinary encounters took place between the desperate Germans and the British. The above picture, drawn by Paul Thiriat, special artist in France for this newspaper, the New York Herald and the London Sphere, illustrates such an incident during the flight across the Petit Morin; the British force surprised a body of German soldiers in the early hours of the morning and compelled them to engage, with results disastrous to the Germans.
