Our School House Down the Hill.

It was the prayer of Ajax: "Dispell the cloud, the light of heaven restore Give me to see, and Ajax asks no more."

I wish this building to help answer that prayer. I wish it to help dispel the cloud to be a light set on a hill, shining into human hearts to make them happier and better, shining out upon bad laws, that good ones may replace them; shining out upon the public taste and revealing how it may be improved; shining out upon the homes of the poor and teaching how they may be made better; shining in upon the homes of the rich and revealing how the grace of the homely virtues, and wherever it shines, on law or taste, on rich or poor, on hearts or homes, carrying healing upon its wings.

I hail, I admire, this new educator, our New School House. It will make better and richer our lives, both by what it is, and what it shall do, our hearts, our heads, our boys, our girls need educating. A boy or a girl who has been moved in the school room, or on the playground over imaginary sorrows of others, who has been stirred by a kind word of his teacher, over the misfortunes of some other child, takes to his home a heart fuller of love and sympathy for those of his own family. As I look into the future, I see boys and girls passing in and out of this same school building, who will yet surprise the world in eloquence, and in song.

This building will yet re-echo to the sound of voices which have saved and spell-bound hundreds of families. Scenes shall yet transpire beneath the roof of this building that may change the fortunes of many households; mould the policy of the government, and affect good will of thousands of people.

In this structure are utilized brains, labor, and intelligence, from which the elements of nature have been found and fashioned by the hand of man into a thing of beauty and a joy, if not forever, at least for generations to come.

It is that wealth that is used and devoted for the best end, for the greatest number that is precious and has intrinsic value.

This building is an illustration of this sentiment, because within its walls may be found thorough and ample facilities for our sons and daughters to enjoy the display and education of art, science and literature.

And I am sure I shall but voice the unanimous sentiments of our people when I congratulate all the teachers of this building upon the good work they have thus far done in this direction. This structure surely stands out in the broad sunlight of day an enduring monument to the projectors of it.

I extend to the school directors the thanks of the general public, not only the people of this town but elsewhere.

This kindly sympathetic feeling has not been produced until now, which is the reason this article did not appear earlier. I desire also to extend congratulations to the architect, John F. Stetler, by whose skill and ability this grand edifice has received majestic proportion, and has arisen successfully from foundation to cope-stone.

Let us not forget also to recognize the mechanics and laborers who were engaged on this good work, and whose fidelity and zeal have attributed so much to its success, and without whose brain and brawn the wealth of the world would be useless. Respy., ZIP.

1900 Not a Leap Year.

The reason why 1900 is not a leap year, although it is divisible by four, is that according to the Gregorian system, on which our calendar is based, the closing year of a century is never a leap year unless it is exactly divisible by 400. The next leap year will be in 1904, the last having been in 1896. Ever since 1600 the leap years at the end of a century have been separated by a gap of eight years, but the year 2000 will interrupt the series.
