Upon the call of the jury docket Tuesday morning, only two cases were marked for trial, the balance being continued or otherwise disposed of. The two set for trial were Thatcher Stone v. Lyman S. Hayes and F. C. Little, ex'r, v. South Lancaster Academy, ap't. The former is assigned for trial to-day (Thursday) and the latter Friday. Several cases were assigned for trial by the state's attorney but it is doubtful if any of them are tried. The jurors were dismissed until 9 a. m. this morning.

We find the following in last week's Burlington Free Press: "At the next session of the Vermont legislature an effort will be made to take the town of Williamstown from Orange county and add it to Washington county. This matter has been agitated for several years, and the citizens of that town claim that the geographical situation and railroad facilities make it proper that the town should be annexed to Washington county. If such a move is made, a hard fight will be made by Orange county." We take it that this is notice to the rest of the county that Williamstown will have no claims upon the next county convention. We have understood that Williamstown had two candidates for the next Republican senatorial nomination, but of course this cannot be true if she is seeking to succeed from the county. Without entering into any discussion of the merits of the proposal, at present, we may say that the above announcement, if authentic, will have a tendency to clear the political horizon.

Windsor County Court.

The December term commenced its session on Tuesday, the 3d inst., with Hon. John W. Rowell presiding, assisted by the assistant judges are William Rounds of Chester and Charles H. Maxham of Pomfret.

Rev. Mr. McMillan offered prayer and court was formally declared open by Sheriff Howe. The grand jurors were then called and four of them failed to respond. Thereupon the court directed the sheriff to summon four talemans.

During the time the sheriff was out getting his substitute grand jurors, his honor Judge Rowell charged the petit jurors, who were called and impanelled. He gave a clear exposition of the duties of the trial juror as set forth in the oath taken by him. He called their attention to the requirement of the oath that they should "say nothing at any time to any person" about the business they might have in hand. He said jurors frequently disqualified themselves from service by thoughtlessly or carelessly talking to outsiders about cases pending. They should not at any time talk about cases; they should be a good deal more careful and particular while actually engaged in the trial of a case. To discuss it at such a time after having been cautioned would render a juror liable to punishment for contempt of court. When a verdict was arrived at, it should be kept secret until delivered in court.

The grand jury was then completed and sworn and Mr. Marsh of Chester was made its foreman.

Judge Rowell prefaced his charge to the grand jurors by an interesting sketch of the origin and commencement of the system. In old times in England each knight was made a reporting officer for his hundred. This was succeeded by a system of summoning eighteen knights for the whole county. This was the inception of the "grand inquest," so called. In old times it was a barrier keeping off monarchical oppression from the people. In this country it is a barrier between the citizen and unjust prosecution from any source. Judge Rowell suggested that the grand jury should keep its sessions as the court did and keep at work the same time with an eye to economic administration of their duty. Petit offenses should be left to be dealt with by justices of the peace.

The calendar of cases for trial by jury contained forty-six entries. Of these seventeen were set for hearing, six settled, ten continued, three referred and the balance left open for disposition otherwise than by trial. On the calendar of court cases are eighty entries. Of these about fifty stand for hearing.

The term will no doubt last through this month.

The case now on trial is Frank W. Watkins v. Wallace Rist, an action to recover damages by trespass of cattle on plaintiff's land. G. A. Davis for plaintiff, W. E. Johnson with him; Stickney & Sargent for defendant.

H. W. Allen & Co. of Burlington call attention to their splendid cloak and fur department in to-day's paper. They have had unusually large sales this season and are now offering some excellent garments at very low prices, reliable goods, just as represented, always at their store.
