

CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE. It was over; he had wrecked his vengeance long enough, and now there was no more that he could do.

Richard told the same tale to Mr. Fox, at his office. The solicitor at first believed him to be mad; but as the conviction of the truth forced itself upon him, his anger and disgust grew so intense that it was with difficulty he could restrain himself from giving vent to it.

Mr. Fox communicated with Mr. John Dunne, whose earnest entreaties that the firm might be spared public disgrace were listened to. As far as possible, reparation was to be made to Frank for what he had suffered.

He came home to find himself a rich man. An estate of great value, in a distant part of Ireland, was purchased for him by the firm, and thither he went with his parents and children.

After the funeral. Of all returnings that one "after the funeral" is the saddest. Who that has followed a beloved one to the grave will say it is not so?

While he lay dead beneath the home roof, there were hurry and bustle in preparation for the funeral rites. Friends are sent for, neighbors are present, the funeral arrangements discussed, the mourning provided for, all is excitement.

But, "after the funeral" after the bustle has all subsided and things begin to move on as usual—then it is that we begin to know what has befallen us.

Oh, how dark and cheerless the night shadows come down after the funeral! No moon or stars ever shone so dimly, no darkness ever seemed so utterly dark.

In any adversity that happens to us in the world, we ought to consider that many sad afflictions are not less natural than snow and hail, storm and tempest; and that it were as reasonable to hope for a year without winter, as for a life without trouble.

NEW CHARITIES.—The new wants growing out of changes in the English mind, have given rise to projects for the formation of institutions adapted to the exigencies of the day.

An English periodical, commenting on this subject, says: "Amidst the many wants and trials that the Church in England has to suffer, it is comforting to find to the good works that are springing up or increasing around us."

DEATH OF THE PROTESTANT BISHOP OF MONTREAL.—Dr. Mulford, the Protestant Bishop of Montreal, lately deceased, was beloved alike by Catholics as well as Protestants, for his many virtues.

Allow me to speak in the name of the members of the English Episcopal Church, and through you to offer our grateful acknowledgment to the Catholic authorities of this city for the courtesy and Christian charity which they displayed in causing the great bell at Notre Dame to be tolled and its flag half-masted out of respect to the memory of our late metropolitan.

FATE OF THE APOSTLES.—Matthew is supposed to have suffered martyrdom, or was slain, in the city of Ethiopia. Mark was dragged through the streets of Alexandria, in Egypt, till he expired.
