

Morning Star and Catholic Messenger. NEW ORLEANS, SUNDAY, JULY 16, 1871.

WIT AND WISDOM. A fireside tale—The cat's. Rich music—A million-airs. Joint proprietors—Butchers.

Shoplifters—Plenty of good customers. Drawing-room—Apartment of a dentist. Fruit for balloonists—Currents in the air.

Regular line of descent—The descent to the stars. Women who would not touch reptiles marry drunkards.

A well-bred woman never hears an impertinent remark. Is the man who believes in suppers necessarily supple?

How to get the exact weight of a fish—Weigh him in his own scales. A husband at home evenings is the right man in the right place.

Woman shows her fondness for the unity by always wanting to be wou. The greatest glory is not in never falling, but in rising every time we fall.

A flirt who kept a list of her admirers in a diary, wittily called it her "him book." A bachelor friend compares a shirt button to life, because it so often hangs by a thread.

Too much cheek shows deficiency of brain, for Nature does not give lavishly of both. Many ladies can bear the loss of their good name, if nice gentlemen give them a better.

A bank-note is better than hard money, because, if you fold it, you'll find it increases. Why is a poor doctor like a mole? Because you can track him by his holes in the ground.

Was Ruth ever rude to Boaz? Oh, yes; when she pulled his ears and trod on his corn. Fortune's favors are like steep rocks—only eagles and creeping things mount to the summit.

Quip believes there are two things to be eternally lost—his umbrella, and the man who stole it. A man who sat upon a paper of carpet nails said they reminded him painfully of the income tax.

Widows have been compared to green wood, which, while it is burning on one side is weeping on the other. The Height of Sabbatarianism—Finding a bank-note on the pavement on a Sunday, and declining to pick it up.

Proverbial Fallacy—Waste not, want not—Both! One may never waste a candle's end and want a thousand tapers.

I could a tail unfold? Could you? Then loss not a moment, but go instantly to Mr. Darwin. He will be delighted to see you.

To be fully up with the century, live habitually, when young, with those older than yourself, and, when old, with those younger.

A Vermont girl inquires if the woman's rights movement includes courting, for the young men in her neighborhood are very bashful.

"There is something very attractive in little girls," said the parson. "Yes," said the old farmer; "and it's still more so as they grow older."

Never chew your words. A student once asked: "Can you give me a definition of a quibble?" "Dwell with that man who is a stranger to rectitude!"

"Mamma," said a precocious little boy, who against his will was made to rock the cradle, "if the Lord has any more babies to give away, don't you take 'em."

The gentleman who borrowed an oyster-knife with which to open an account at a banker's is anxious to meet with a patent cork-screw to draw a check.

A drunken man, after trying in vain to keep on the sidewalk, was heard to exclaim, as he heaped for the middle of the street, "There! now go in the street, if you want to."

"I have millions of money," said a dashing fop to a girl about to run away with him; "but you might as well scrape up all the jewels and spare change you have got."

A sharp grocer, when a customer observed that a good deal remained in the measure after it was turned, remarked, "There was some in the measure before I drew your gallon."

An exchange says that a street in Peoria, which was known last year as "Furline Dove Avenue," has been changed to "Nursery Row."

An old woman driving a four-footed troop was accosted by a young man with, "Good-morning, mother of donkeys!" The dame meekly replied, "Good morning to you, my son."

In the Picture Gallery—Young lady (indignant): "Now, I told you, papa, this wasn't the fashionable hour. We'll have nothing but these horrid pictures to look at until the people come!"

A female lecturer said: "Get married, young men, and be quick about it. Don't wait for the millennium, for the girls to become angels. You'd look well beside an angel, wouldn't you, you blockheads?"

The Connecticut papers are telling of a Sunday School boy, who being asked who made the beautiful hills about there, replied that he did not know, as his parents only moved into town the Friday before.

Thompson is not going to do anything mere in connection with the case. He recently asked his wife the difference between his head and a hog's head, and she said there was none. He says that is not the right answer.

A lady and her two daughters having arrived at the drawing-room, and given their names, "Mrs. Foote and daughters," were horrified at hearing themselves announced by the footman as "Mrs. Foot and the Miss Feet."

Want of Tact.—Remarking to a fat man, "May your shadow never be less?" Saying to a friend, whose nasal organ is not conspicuous for beauty, that something is as plain as the nose on his face. Asking a deaf man whether he hears good accounts of his son.

If some are refined, like gold, in the furnace of affliction, there are many more that, like chaff, are consumed in it. Sorrow, when it is excessive, takes away fervor from piety, vigor from action, health from the body, light from the reason and repose from the conscience.

He took her fancy when he came, he took her hand, he took a kiss; he took no notice of the shade that glowed her happy cheek at this. He took to coming afternoons, he took an oath he'd ne'er deceive, he took her master's silver spoons, and then he took his leave.

Methodist preachers are proverbially facetious. A day or two since, in the course of the trial of Dr. Lanahan before the Book Committee of the Methodist Church, the Rev. Mr. Moore made the statement that a Methodist preacher had been hung, and Moore ought to be "whereupon a good brother promptly asked, "Which Moore?"

A burly Teuton entered a city car one day with a large meerschaum in his mouth, and taking the only vacant seat, proceeded to roll forth huge volumes of smoke. The conductor, seeing this violation of the rules, stepped up to him and said, "No smoking allowed." The Dutchman, taking his pipe from his mouth with an air of astonishment, thus replied to the polite conductor, "I don't make no noise ven I schmokes."

JUVENILE COLUMN.

MAMIE AND EDDIE; OR, "THE LAST QUARREL."

Oh! dear! groaned little Mamie Armstrong, throwing her doll disconsolately to the ground, and glancing up angrily at her mischievous brother, who was standing behind her chair, amusing himself by tickling the back of her neck with a straw, "can't you let me be?"

For a reply Eddie only laughed, and tickled her a second time. Mamma! Mamma! at last screamed Mamie thoroughly aroused, as her brother, for the third time resumed his mischievous occupation; will you please make Eddie stop!

"What is he doing, dear, anything to annoy you?" inquired Mrs. Armstrong. Yes, mam'm, he's teasing me and I think he's just as ugly as he can be! answered the exasperated child, and covering her face with her little hands, the angry sobs burst suddenly forth.

"There! Mamie, there!" whispered the now repentant Eddie, as he quickly threw his arms around her and endeavored in vain to allay the storm he had provoked. Don't cry, I'm so sorry I teased you, come give me a kiss and let's make friends.

I shan't do anything of the kind, you ugly, hateful boy—Let me go, or I'll scream as loud as I can; answered Mamie, and sitting the action to the word she began to scream at the top of her voice.

"Why, Mamie, Mamie!" interposed her mother in a displeased voice, "I am really ashamed of you; and very much grieved to think that any little girl of mine should behave in such a silly, ridiculous manner. Now, kiss your brother at once, and tell him how sorry you are for what you have said, or I shall be obliged to punish you. And you, Eddie, say to Mamie that you too are sorry for what you have done, and promise to me that you will never allow yourself to tease her again. Come now, do as I tell you," and glancing from one to the other, she waited for them to comply with her request.

For an instant Eddie hesitated and seemed about to do as he had been desired, but one glance at the angry face of his sister put his good resolution to flight and he remained standing where he was.

Mamie paid no attention to her mother's earnest request, her angry passions had so completely mastered her. Just at this moment Mrs. Armstrong was called to the drawing room, leaving the two children alone together. For a few minutes, not a word was said, then, as if the fires of passion had attained additional intensity by the short silence, the quarrel again commenced. Mamie opened her bosom to her doll and told it how she hated naughty boys who did not know how to behave themselves. Eddie, having no doll to speak to, delivered his opinions to the wall, showing clearly how he despised girls who wouldn't let a boy touch them, and would cry and run off and tell tales.

Mamie growing more and more angry at every word Eddie said, burst forth in almost hysterical tones. "There! I wish you never were my brother; I wish I never had a brother. I wish you never had," replied Eddie, laughing more provokingly than ever.

Oh, dear! at last she cried in the paroxysm of her rage, I wish I was dead, and then you'd be sorry!" Mrs. Armstrong entered the room at this moment and understanding at once, how matters stood, ordered Eddie to his room there to remain till dinner time, and sent Mamie to her own chamber.

When Mr. Armstrong came to dinner he seemed annoyed by Eddie's absence. The first bell Eddie had heard, but did not wish to answer, and it was rang a second time. He finally came in, making as much noise as possible and seemingly resolved to show his bad temper. He put his elbows on the table and commenced to beat a loud tattoo on the table; until his father in a stern voice said: "Take your elbows off the table, sir."

As if animated by the very spirit of mischief itself, Eddie had no sooner obeyed this order than he commenced scraping his feet very loud on the floor.

His father, immediately turning to him, said: "Go to your room, sir, and remain there the rest of the afternoon. A boy who knows not enough to treat his mother and sister with proper respect, shall never sit at this table; go, sir!"

After dinner, which had been eaten in silence and sadness by all, Mr. Armstrong, knowing nothing of the quarrel and remembering that the children had been invited to spend the evening with their aunt, turned to Mamie and said, in a tone which he tried to make cheerful: "Come, puss, get on your hat and jacket, and I myself will take you to your Aunt Sarah's; truly it would be a shame to make you lose all your pleasure by staying at home, just because your brother has taken it into his head to be a naughty boy to-day."

Mamie would have refused had she been able, but she saw that, if she did so, she would have been obliged to tell her father all that had happened.

She found her aunt and little cousins all anxiously waiting for them, and, though they did everything in their power to make the time pass pleasantly, it was evident that there was a heavy weight on her little heart. When they asked her why Eddie did not come, poor Mamie did not know what to say, and as she stood, trying to think of some excuse to give for his absence, his image, seated in his little room, alone and almost broken-hearted, rose in her mind, and she could not restrain the flood of tears which gushed to her eyes and ran down her cheeks.

At dark her father called for her and in a few minutes she found herself in her little room.

Knocking down, as was her custom, to say aloud her evening prayers before retiring, she found it impossible to repeat them with that fervor and piety she had been accustomed to. Again and again she recommenced them, but without avail. At last, in sheer despair, she suddenly arose from her knees, and, quickly jumping into bed, hastily covered up her head with the bed clothes.

But she could not sleep and her little mind kept working and working, and, as she thought about the good God who loved us all so much, and how she had caused little Eddie so much suffering when she knew that she ought to love him so much, she could restrain herself no longer, and jumping up, she rushed to his room, and, throwing her arms around him, begged his forgiveness in the most piteous tones.

Eddie's tears flowed fast, too, and, locked in each other's arms, they confessed how badly they had acted, and prayed for forgiveness from each other and from their dear Saviour.

Mrs. Armstrong entered the room at this moment, and was delighted and deeply touched at the scene. Kneeling down all together they prayed for grace to withstand the power of their evil passions, and their prayer was answered, as another quarrel between these two dear little children was never heard.
