JUVENILE COLUMN.

MARGUERITE. Once upon a time there lived in a small village a very pious family by the name of Stanly. Their only child was a little daughter who had not attained her seventh year; but so pious were the little Marguerite's parents that they in every way endeavored to subdue all earthly desires and cultivate in her a supreme love of God. Thus when Mrs. Stanly impressed upon Marguerite's mind that Jesus was her Father, the Blessed Virgin her Mother and Heaven her home, the innocent child accepted it literally in all its beautiful simplicity. The one longing desire of her little heart was to behold and be with those heavenly parents, so earnestly and beautifully portrayed to her by her pious mother. She knew not, as you do, children, that in order to enter that home, she would have to pass through "the dark valley and shadow of death."

The Parliament of England. THE DISRUPTION OF PARTIES AND THE IRISH REPRESENTATION. [From the Pall Mall Gazette.] The disorganization of the present House of Commons is now so complete that no parallel to it can be found except by going back to events only just within the memory of the elder men of this generation. The first House of Commons elected after the first Reform Bill had a very strong resemblance to the House elected in 1869, and it included the same vast majority which went to pieces in the same way. It has become evident that English parliamentary institutions, which are never so much put to the strain as after great organic changes such as occurred in 1832 and 1867, will only work with decent regularity and smoothness under the two sets of conditions. The assembly which really governs the country has no counterpart in any similar body in any country that respects the multitudinousness of its composition, and it can be made to transact the business of government with exactness when one side has a very great majority over the other. In that case the House of Commons, so to speak, works itself. The House of Commons can again be worked under very different circumstances, when both sides are very nearly balanced, when the two great parties sit watching one another like hostile armies, and when all the resources of parliamentary management are systematically and patiently used to seize the smallest chance of advantage and to prevent a surprise. Neither state of things now exists. Mr. Gladstone's great majority is practically gone, not so much from the discount of small sections such as the pure Whigs or the pure Nonconformists, as from the unconcealed disaffection of the Irish members, who are said to be so constantly on the look-out for opportunities of joining the Opposition that they positively frighten the Conservative leaders. On the other hand, the period of skilful tactical management has not yet arrived. On the Liberal side, at all events, the evidence points to the extreme slackness or unskillfulness, or rather the tactics are those of generals at the head of a beaten and dissolving army.

constantly been attractive in the highest degree to Englishmen as individuals. There are all sorts of elements in thought and feeling of the present day for which such a policy has affinities. It commands itself to the sentimental respect felt by numbers of men for the new-born theories of the rights of nationalities. It falls in with the equally powerful laissez faire, or devil-take-the-hindmost set of principles. It saves trouble, it appeals to the emotional side of character, and it has an air of novelty and originality. By one of these characteristics it has laid hold of Mr. Gladstone; by another it may lay hold of Mr. Disraeli. Even if the leaders of both parties are seen angling for Irish support in the new Parliament with the bait of Irish ideas, we have no belief that the country will at once hold up its hands in amazed indignation. The unnatural alliance of political parties seem to us to be condoned with remarkable ease in our own day, whatever our forefathers may have thought of them. But if the result of the competition be to rally the Irish members round Mr. Disraeli, we may be sure that in the long run mighty events are in store for us. If ever the new policy of Prince Bismarck becomes practicable in this country, it will be because the various forms of sacerdotalism will have combined to facilitate the disruption or loosening of the Imperial fabric of our Government. A Liberal party arrayed against a Conservative Government which was allied to the nationalist nominees of the Irish priesthood, would assuredly try to explain the alliance by the natural tendency of the Ritualism within the English Church to combine with the full-blown sacerdotalism of the Roman Church. If the nation were once persuaded of this, nothing is more probable than that some passionate movement would at once crush the Establishment and dictate measures for preserving the unity of the Empire to which the legislation of Prince Bismarck would be child's play.

COLLEGE OF THE IMMACULATE CONCEPTION, CORNER OF COMMON AND BARONNE STREETS, NEW ORLEANS. This Literary Institution, incorporated by the State of Louisiana, and empowered to confer degrees, is conducted by the Fathers of the Society of Jesus. The buildings are well adapted for educational purposes. It is pleasantly situated on the street, is reserved for recreation; so that, from the arrival of the pupils, at 7:30 A. M., till their departure at 4 P. M., they are constantly occupied and entertained. The Course of Instruction is threefold: Preparatory, Commercial and Classical. The Preparatory Course is for beginners. The Commercial Course is for those students who do not wish to learn Latin and Greek. The Classical Course is for those who desire to have a complete education. French is taught in the three courses. Students are not admitted, unless they know how to read and write. The moral and religious training of the students is the leading object of the institution. The pupils are never separated from their instructors. Recreation, table, dormitories, are the same for all. In short, everything tends to promote the high education of the Sisters and the young ladies entrusted to their motherly care. The instruction is thorough and solid, and in harmony with the requirements of society. The courses comprise both English and French in all the branches of knowledge cultivated at the present day. Each language is taught by natives of respective countries, so as to insure correct pronunciation. The academical year closes with a public exhibition and distribution of premiums, to which parents are invited. Education is here the object of special attention and solicitude. Governing those placed under their charge by moral instruction, the Sisters, under the direction of the Superior, endeavor to inculcate the principles of solid piety, require the strict observance of polite and amiable deportment, and insist on respect and affection towards parents. Girls of all denominations are admitted. Note.—During the bathing season, the Boarding School is moved to the Bay St. Louis, where the Sisters of St. Joseph have a flourishing academy. AN OLD WAR HORSE.—We noticed, the other day, in a pull of a country grocer that he was spoken of as "one of the war horses of the trade." We suppose that means he is a heavy charger.
