TRANSFUSION OF BLOOD.

At the last sitting of the Paris Academy of Sciences, an interesting paper was read on an operation of transfusion of blood. At the time the operation was decided upon, the patient (a woman) appeared to be on the brink of the grave; the pulse was imperceptible, her weakness such that she was unable to move, her eyesight all but extinguished, and she was unable to speak, and nothing would stay on her stomach. Dr. Behier performed the operation in the presence of a number of assistants. He said it was highly important the blood to be injected should be pure and in its natural state, without being deprived of its fibrin or allowed to cool. Such preliminaries had been considered necessary in order to prevent coagulation in the vein; but there was no need of them if the operation was quickly effected. The blood should not be dead, but living. One of the obstacles that had hitherto caused transfusion to be looked upon with disfavor was the difficulty of introducing the nozzle of the syringe into the vein. The late Dr. Nelaton had proposed to obviate this by an incision of the skin an inch long, in order to bring the vein into a view. Dr. Behier prefers opening the vessel with the lance, as in blood-letting; he recommends the incision to be performed slowly, to prevent the sudden repletion of the right ventricle of the heart, which would cause asphyxia and death. The quantity of blood administered in this case was not more than eight grammes. The possibility of success is now proved beyond a doubt after a controversy which has lasted upward of two centuries.

A clergyman being annoyed by some of his audience leaving the church while he was speaking, took for his text, "Thou art weighed in the balance, and found wanting." After a few sentences he said, "You will please pass out as fast as you are weighed."

A CARD.

New Orleans, March 20, 1874. I hereby take much pleasure in stating that I hold a Health Policy in the "Ladies and Orphans' Friendly Society, on which I have taken my mutual health as promptly paid $112 compensation for ninety-eight days' loss of time. This speaks for itself and shows the great relief afforded to the sick, and to those who become members of this Beneficial Society. The payments are so small as to place its great benefits within the reach of all. Female as well as male members are admitted.

As the sickly and yellow fever season approaches, every person should become a member of this society, and thus secure the means which pay nurses, physicians and board during sickness.

Had the citizens of Shreveport and Memphis had the benefits of such a society during the last epidemic, their dreadful sufferings would have been greatly relieved.

Active, reliable and conscientious agents wanted in every town in Mississippi and Louisiana. For further particulars apply to the undersigned.
