PERE MARQUETTE. BY HATTIE TING GRIEWOLD.

Oh, pale young priest, whose dreamy ey With more than Rembrandt splendor with more than temperant splenders give Standing beneath the tonder skice Of fair, soft France, dreaming thy dream: I give back at time, through the years of Glerious with many a dean-longish fame, And nowhere faileth tenderer spare Than on the page which bears thy name.

Lose in the page which bears thy name.

Full of the bursing dream of fame.
Longing, ade an the breathless hush
Of coming time, to bear thy name:
Aglow with all the maddening wine
Which surges in the value of youth,
Drunk with the splender of the fine
Grand dreams, then heldest for the truth.

Ob, matchless spiesdor of the days!

Ere yet we have unlearned our drea
How, from the sunset side of life,
The radiance of them gleams!
I see thee standing now smid
The fragrance of those early hopes,
Why, yet, from thy deep eyes, are hid
Life's saddened western slopes.

And then I watch thee, while the thought Of duty slowly fills thy acul, Till, by degrees, thy life is brought 'Neath its divine gentral, And slowly, sadly, one by one, Thy dreams, thy hopes before it fall.
Till the one thought—work to be done
For God and man—is all.

Across the sea it speeds thy feet,
Across the trackless western wild.
Where the rade savage, stern and fleet,
Lists to the words, so mild
And gentle, thou dest speak;
While others parish quick as thought,
They seem to read, though poor and we
The message thou hast brought.

Around Superior's pictured rocks They gather, listening to thy words, While far away the battle's shocks Seem to recede, and chords Of tenderer feeling softly stir Within each dull and savage heart; Christ's name upon the page they blur With tears from founts which rarely start

In lodges of each warlike race And many a stern and sombre fac-Lights up to see thee near Through dales of rivers broad and deep usin and the turbid For Fearless and strong, I see thee leap, Adown each bed of rocks.

Beside thee stands a trusted friend The savage, unknown lands Portage, and marsh, and sandy bar Impede thy course and hide their track, But onward led, as by a star, Thou never lookest back.

Safely through Mississippi's waves They lead thee on thy goodly quest, Dotting the shore along with graves Of bravest and of best. O, Journey grand, on unknown trail, Amid a new world's darksome sha This new quest for the Holy Grail, Glows like the old crusades!

Now, by Lake Huron's stony shore They point us to a lonely grave; Rudely the inland sea doth roar, Wildly the pine trees wave, And jagged rocks flung everywhere, Bear scani and sombre conts of mo No vine, no flower is awaying there, Naught save a moss-grown cross,

Yes more than sculptured menume To rest so, shines adown the ways Of this dull age, and shows us so, A man to fill our longing eyes, Whereiu with saintly radiance glow The beauties of self-sacrifice-

Below we give a brief outline of the life and labors of a great and sainted prejate, whose name is cherished as one of the bright luminaries of the Irish Church, and who was a contemporary with Archbishop Hughes, both whose majestic intellects, under different circumstances, were bulwarks of Catholic unity and progress, and awayed, by their force and brilliancy, the public opinion of two countries.

James Warren Doyle was the son of James Doyle, a respectable farmer, near the town of New Ross, county Werford, and was born in the autumn of 1785. At the age of eleven years he witnessed the most terrific doings of the first inaurreation of 1793, as he lived within view of Vinegar Hill, which, if success had crowned the efforts of the Irish in the unequal contest, would have become as great an object of historical interest as Bunker Hill is at the present day.

In his boyhood he felt that he had a voof historical interest as Dunnal of historical interest as Dunnal the present day.

In his boyhood he felt that he had a vocation for the Church, and received his cassical education in an Augustinian mon satery, and he pursued his aubsequent academical and classical course in the University of Coimbra, Portugal. He was at heal days for academical and classical course in the University of Coimbra, Portugal. He was distinguished even in his youthful days for intellectual tastes and for a remarkable aptitude for atudy and learning. The even tenor of his collegiate life was interrupted by the invasian of Pertugal by the French. He shouldered his musket to repel, in con junction with Wellington and the allies, the invaders of the country of his temporary sojourn. "I was," says Dr. Doyle, "a sort of nondescript with the rank of captain, and an interpreter between the English and Portuguese armics. "I was present at the battle of Caldas, Relica and Vimiero." I was greatly exposed to the fire of iero. I was greatly exposed to the fire of the enemy, as I was obliged to keep going to and fro with orders and dispatches to the Portuguese General. He brought up General Abstruther's division, then returning to and fro with orders and dispatches to the Portuguese General." He brought up General Astruther's division, then returning from Sweden, within a comparatively short distance of Vimiero. They were in time to take their position in the field, and contributed to the success of that great day. But if young Doyle put on the soldier, he did not put off the saint. "Before and during the bloody engagements," he says, at Rolica, where the French lost fifteen hundred men, "I was intrenched behind a strong wind-mill, ball-proof, employed in giving spiritual assistance to a number of soldiers, who, knowing that I was in priest's orders, sought my aid."

In 1808 he returned to Ireland, and was chosen professor of rhetoric in Carlow College, and, a short time after, was promoted to the chair of theology, which onerous and arduous duties he discharged with exemplary zeal: He was chosen bishop in 1819, at an age but little over thirty years. After his elevation to the episcopacy his letters over the signature of "J.K. L." (James of Kildare and Leighlin) began to appear, which, by their style, force and reasoning, startled the public mind, and impressed weightily the literary as well as the political circles of the day, and were as much leoked for by the reading public, as were the writings of Janius in his time. No political writings of Janius in his time. No political writings have appeared since white could compare with Dr. Doyle's in ability, force of argument or lueid expositions of his subject. Strength and decisiveness were the great characteristics of Dr. Doyle's mind. These he manifested even at an early age—first, when he was in imminent danger of being shot near one of the battlefields of '393, and subsequently in Portugal, when he donned the military costume. They were atill more manifest in the House of Lords and Commons, where he stood undauntedly before the leading men of the United Kingdom, as a witness on Irish questions, when several able men were overpowered by the ordeal. He entertained nor meral fear nor on Irian questions, when several able men were overpowered by the ordeal. He survey and the content of the contrary, he was resolute and collected amid a host of importunate and insolent questioners who were directly opposed to him.

He differed with O'Connell on very important questions, and one in particular, that of the Irish poor laws, which Lord John Russell, in later years, used with ven geance for the destruction of Irish life in doleing out nuwholesome and insufficient food.

The English Government frequently made The English Government frequently made overtures of patronage for his friends, which he spurned with indignation—asserting that "gifts corrupt the heart, abase the mind and pervert the conscience." "My kidgdom," he replied, "is not of this world; I have no link to bind me to it." Dr. Doyle's charity was unbounded, and his self-abnegation proverbial. A zealous prelate and a patriot, he performed much labor in a few years, and died, in what is generally termed the prime of life, at the age of forty-eight years, on the 15th June, 1837.

The Tomb of the Blessed Virgin. On quitting Jerusalem by St. Stephen's gate on the east side of the city, one de scends through a ravine into the depths of the valley of Josaphat, having to the right and left the Mussulman cemetery. After passing the bed of the torrent Cedron, which is always dry, you perceive to your left the facade of the Church of the Assumption, which is built at the foot of the Mount of Olives and at some little distance from the grotto where our Lord aweat bloed on the eve of his passion. Forty-eight steps which the feet of thousands have nearly worn away, conduct to a vast and dark chamber, cut out of the solid rock. The tomb of the Holy Virgin is hewn out of the living rock and like that of her divine Son, is covered with white marble, so that pilgrims may not commit any acts of vandalism by carrying off fragments thereof. One may repeat of this tomb what Chateaubriand said about the Holy Sepulchre, that "it will have nothing to yield apon Jadgment day," for tradition says that the body of Mary was assumed into Heaven three days after her death. St. Helena built here a noble-church in honor of our Lady, but the builders, following the bad example of the architects of the Holy Sepulchre, isolated the tomb from the rock, teaving only just the block on which was the tomb itself, intact. The walls of the church have all been all cut out of the solid mountain, and it is large, but damp and dark. This church contains the tomb of Melistinds, wife of Baldwin II. and mother of Baldwin IV, Kings of Jerusatem. This princess conducted the affairs of the kingdom for thirty years as regent. Her tomb is to the right on entering the sacred edifice, and it is reported that the vanils below contain also the tombs of the kingdom for thirty years as regent. Her tomb is to the right on entering the sacred edifice, and it is reported on the well-known fact that he Joseph. But this is probably an error founded on the hear of the franciscans to be restored as guardians of the sanctuary. In 1757, the Council did not easy that Mary died here, The plant of the control the "Placetine exploration fund, are of much interest. The Year of the Jubiles, 1875.

IN. Y. Cathesite Review

Our Moat Holy Father, Pope Pins IX., has issued, we learn from the American Press Association, an encyclical ordering the celebration of the Jubilee during the eurrent year, 1875. This year is the wasternal season for it, according to prescription, but there was some fear that, owing to the unsatisfactory condition of the Eternal City, there would be no public colebration of the Jubilee. We presume that, so far as the visit of crowds of pilgrims to the Leternal City is concerned, the Jubilee of IS73 will be shorn of much of its granted and an adverted the whole Church of God should not blaze with an eathusiasm of fervor and penitence such as has been evoked by no Jubilee since the Whole Church of God should not blaze with an eathusiasm of fervor and penitence such as has been evoked by no Jubilee since to manned for; we have also much for which a Jubilee of joy is demanded. We are persecuted everywhere, but is there a weak sport in any part of the Church ? Many of our bishops are in prison, so even is the Pontiff in bis own Eternal City—the City for the Jubilee—but have we not this to console as: that his days have been profess in the grant lity of the Jubilee—but have we not this to console as: that his days have been profess in being dispensed through the mouth of Pio? Has he not, too, demonstrated over and over again that even if kings are not with us, the Holy Ghost remains with the Church during this grant per person where the condition of the exceedingly great benefits which resulted from the American Pilgrim; age of hast year. There would be a special appropriateness in undertaking this year such another pious journey. We trust that the Catholic Union, or some to their responsible organization will undertake such a holy enterprise.
