Orders were given to the inmates of alleged disorderly places at Lake View, Hancock, South Range and Superior, to leave the county at once and notice was given that any deviation from this instruction would be followed by immediate arrest and prosecution. Sheriff Cruise stated today that he has been given assurance that a large number of alleged disorderly places have already departed and that others will depart today.

The clean-up orders are about as sweeping as any that have been issued by the county officials since they assumed their duties on January 1. It is said about 15 alleged disorderly women are affected.

TUBERCULOSIS DECREASES.

Fewer Deaths in Michigan Since the Year 1905.

In 1904 and 1906 tuberculosis was at the zenith of its power in Michigan, taking by death 85 out of every 100,000 people in Michigan, or a total of 2,399 for each year.

The campaign of education was put into full force. Anti-tuberculosis societies were formed, doctors gave the best advice obtainable. The fresh air and wholesome food doctrine was heeded, and tuberculosis death rate for Michigan has gone down, being 74 last year or 12 points lower than the last few years. That means there were 12 fewer deaths from consumption to each 100,000 population in 1912 than in 1904 or 1906. This applied to Michigan's 2,390,000 means that 226 lives were saved last year through the advance knowledge in caring for patients and preventing the spread of the disease.

Several carriages which were stored in the shed were destroyed.

MRS. KUUSISTO MAY TALK SOON

Woman Held for Murdering Husband Improved Today

Mrs. Anna Kuusisto, arrested yesterday on the charge of having murdered her husband, Elias Kuusisto, with an axe at their home in Tamara, shows signs of improvement today and the belief is expressed that she will soon be able to tell what she knows of the crime, if she so desires. While the woman has made absolutely no reference to the murder, or her family, she has talked of other things and shows signs of awakening from the mental stupor she was in when the officers arrested her yesterday. She sat in a daze while the officers investigated the circumstances of the murder, for which she is held. While still unable to leave her bed in the county jail, the woman conversed to some extent with the officers today.

There is but little doubt of her insanity. She was so adjudged by a special commission last August, following her arrest on August 5, charged with a murderous assault upon her husband, also with an axe. The woman was detained in the county jail three months, during which time her mental condition showed such improvement it was thought she had completely recovered. Her husband, the victim of the assault at that time and of yesterday's murder, made application for the county authorities for his release, stating that their children needed her attention, and that as she had recovered, there could be no danger in allowing her to return home. The officers finally agreed to this course as there seemed no need of other action.

The Kuusisto children, six in number, the oldest eleven, are being cared for under the direction of the juvenile court.

IMPERSONATOR OF LINCOLN ATTRACTION HERE FRIDAY

BENJAMIN CHAPIN LAST NUMBER ON THE Y. M. C. A. LYCEUM COURSE.

On Friday evening, Benjamin Chapin, impersonator of Lincoln will appear at the Calumet theater under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. lyceum course, this attraction being the last of the regular course, although there is still a substitute number for the Steiner lecture to come. Relative to Chapin the Boston Journal says:

Mr. Chapin's treatment of the theme is absolutely original and unique in general scheme and in details. His first entrance upon the audience is on his journey to take up the cares of state in Washington. With tall hat of the 1860 date and loose-fitting, long black coat, the President—for he is to really be, so portrait-like is the makeup of his face and so like the President's stature is the thin and angular figure of the speaker, six feet, three inches in height—stands with one foot resting on the steps leading to the platform, turns to one side and delivers the speech, or a concentration of it, that Lincoln in fact delivered from the steps of his train at the depot.

The portrayal is divided into four acts following this thrilling prologue which has started the audience and held it half-awake, half-asleep. Act first shows a home scene at the white house, with President Lincoln in monologue of course, trying to "renew the acquaintance of his family." The rather ungracious personality of Mrs. Lincoln represented on the one hand and his affectionate confidences with little son Tad, on the other, abiding the southerner from the maternal standpoint, constitute the burden of this scene. Incidentally the characteristic attitude, often described, of Lincoln as not at the desk, with one knee dragging almost to the floor and the huge foot of that leg sprawling at a distance behind his chair, was realized again with startling effect.

Act second represents Lincoln contemplating a dispute between Secretary Stanton and General Hooker. The third act is "The Darkest Hour Before the Dawn," representing President Lincoln receiving delegations come to protest and criticize, and his sleepless vigils during the waning of the crisis between the contending hosts at Gettysburg. Act four opens with the preparations for setting out for Ford's Theatre where the assassination took place, and Lincoln's account of his dream of assassination, with the parading of a soldier as his last act before going to the theater.
