Carrying a Pistol.

No case has attracted so much attention in Fort Worth lately as the trial of T. J. Mabin, a man appointed by Mayor Broiles to act as a special policeman, with a view of carrying out the Sunday law with more stringency than formerly prevailed in this city. The trial began Thursday morning and was not finished until late yesterday afternoon. Justice Nance had none other than investigating power, and the result was that he ordered Mabin to give a $100 bond to appear before the County court. It was the general bellef that the Judge would have fixed the defendant had he possessed the jurisdiction held by justices until recent legislation increased the fine for carrying pistols to a maximum of
