FORTUNES MADE BY SONG WRITERS.

In the October American Magazine, there is an article about the fortunes made by song writers. The writer says:

"When the new style of popular song had wormed its way into the public's heart, the Bowery took Harry von Tilzer in hand and tutored him with the intention of having him amuse and entertain the public with his melodies. Von Tilzer was born in Indiana, and his musical education consisted of one piano lesson. But the Bowery was after a creator not a player. Von Tilzer gleaned his conception of popular music and harmony from the malodorous concert halls filled with clouds of cheap cigarette smoke, semi-happy sailors, and painted, whirling faces. At the inception of his career he wrote long and often but no one displayed any interest in his work and he had a desperate time of it keeping body and soul in tact.

"In those days it was easier for me to write a dozen songs than make connections for a square meal," Harry smiles, whenever he falls into a reminiscent mood. "And I was ready to sell a song for from fifty cents up. I never did get started until Sterling and I wrote the ballad, 'My Old New Hampshire Home.' After making the rounds with it to a new publisher on 25th street. He listened to it and then puckered up his lips. Finally he agreed to take it home and have his little daughter play it, saying that if she should like it he would give us fifteen dollars for it. For the first time in my moons Sterling and I said a prayer, and the next day we got a check for fifteen dollars."

"Would you sell any of your songs now for fifteen?" the writer queried in a joking manner.

"Harry grinned, and shook his head. 'Can you picture me selling a song like "Last Night Was the End of the World" for fifteen dollars? It sold more than a million and a half copies, and my royalty alone would be almost $10,000, to say nothing as to my share from the publishing end. To-day I would not take $15,000 for my latest song, "I Sent My Wife to the Thousand Isles," which Al Johnson introduced at the Winter Garden."

"What is the best way for a new writer to get a start?" Harry was asked.

"The Lord only knows," he smiled.

DALY DRY GOODS CO.

Every fellow seems to get going in a different way—some by accident, some by design, some by patience and plodding. I know several that owe their start to Sophia Tucker, one of the greatest popular song exploiters in vaudeville. In fact, she looked upon and billed in all the big time vaudeville houses as the Mary Garden of popular songs."
