NEGROES TREACHEROUS.

The Denton Negro Porter Makes an Affidavit. From the Galveston News.

Dallas, Tex., Oct. 25.—The report published in the News that Gov. Hogg refused to allowed the negro porter of the Oatman house at Denton to take his valise, saying to him: "You negroes are treacherous; I can't trust you," was denied by Gov. Hogg in his Paris speech. The News report was correct. All denials of reports in the News will be nailed to the cross. The time has come for the News to nail them. The News wrote for the porter's affidavit. Here it is:

HARRISON WELCH'S AFFIDAVIT.

The state of Texas, county of Denton: I hereby state on my oath that Gov. J. S. Hogg said to me at the Oatman house in the city of Denton Monday, Oct. 3, 1892, when I went out to take his grip: "No uncle, don't take that grip. You negroes are all treacherous; I can't trust you."

HARRISON WELCH.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this Oct. 24, 1892.

O. P. POE.

Notary public in and for Denton county, Tex.

A WITNESS SPEAKS.

To The News.

Denton, Tex., Oct. 24. I notice in your paper of Oct. 21 Gov. Hogg's address at Paris, Tex. The governor says in his speech that "a great many lies have been told on him," and "that was all a lie about that porter business at Denton." Now Gov. Hogg either has a bad memory or is trying to get out of what he said to the negro porter, Harrison Welch, at the Oatman house in Denton Monday, Oct. 3. I was sitting on the porch in front of the Oatman house on that date, when Gov. Hogg drove up in his carriage with H. C. Ferguson. The porter for the Oatman house went out and took hold of Gov. Hogg's grip. Gov. Hogg shook his satchel and said: "Uncle, let go that grip; you negroes are all treacherous. I can't trust you." One of the short hand reporters of the News, who had come to Denton to report the governor's speech, was sitting on the porch at the same time. I know that I cannot be mistaken, for I was within six or eight feet of Hogg when he made the remark to the porter. I regret getting mixed up in this matter, but common fairness dictates that I speak out in the light of the turn the report has taken. The negro porter, Harrison Welch, can get the indorsement of more than 100 of the leading citizens and business men of Denton as to his honesty and veracity; and besides, if Gov. Hogg did not think he had insulted the negro, why did apologize to the negro in the Oatman house in the presence of several parties?
