USE OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Land Commissioner Robinson started Monday on an extended tour of inspection of unsold public school land in the Texas counties contiguous to the Rio Grande. In some of these counties large areas have never been surveyed, and but little is known of their value; from some of the lower counties have come reports of the discovery of coal and precious minerals on state lands; in the Texas valley there is much excitement over the report that the Texas company has struck a rich flow of oil in a district where the state is a large land owner, while more or less valuable deposits of minerals are known to exist in the Delaware and Guadalupe mountain regions.

Commissioner Robinson is to be commended for his zeal in seeking to obtain personal knowledge of the character and value of the state's land, and The Record hopes that he will extend his investigation until he becomes familiar with the more than 2,000,000 acres that will soon be placed on the market for sale. We hope, also, that the facts learned during this tour of inspection will prompt him to modify his recommendation that all land remaining unsold July 1, 1911, be offered for sale to the highest bidder without improvement of settlement or limitation of the amount that may be purchased by one person.

As The Record has heretofore pointed out, the public land is being sold rapidly and while much of what remained unsold may be of a character unfit for homesteads at this time, there is no evidence yet of a disposition of the public demand for it as homesteads.

In view of all that has been said and written during recent years about the feasibility of impounding flood waters for irrigation, it occurs to us that it would be wise and timely for the next legislature to make provision for a survey of the western portion of the state where large areas of unsold public land are situated with a view of ascertaining the feasibility of reclaiming large areas by irrigation. Even though the state should not desire to construct dams and place water on the land in order to enhance the value of its own and adjoining lands, the report of the state engineer would challenge the attention of investors, and through the state's present ownership of reservoir sites, the inauguration of irrigation projects could be aided. The success of the reclamation work of the federal government proves the feasibility and the value of such projects.

Such an irrigation survey, supplemented by a thorough and exhaustive mineral survey, would not only add materially to the sale price of the public lands, but would hasten the development of these sections, and what is also important, insure development along the lines that will benefit all the people rather than a few large landowners.—Fort Worth Record.

A DRAINAGE CONVENTION.

Texas should be represented by a good, strong delegation at the Mississippi Valley Drainage and Highway association that meets at Memphis, Tenn., next week. The object of the association, as its name indicates, is the reclamation of swamp lands in the states bordering on the Mississippi river; nevertheless the feeling of good neighborhood would doubtless insure to a Texas delegation cordial welcome.

Twenty-five million acres of swamp lands are estimated to be along the river between St. Louis and New Orleans. When drained and protected from submersion these lands are as fertile as any acreage lying out of doors, and are capable, thus treated, of summing up increasing the grain and cotton production of the country. Some of these lands are owned by private parties, and in a few instances drainage has been undertaken. In the southeastern corner of Missouri the government is assisting in the reclamation of a large area of overflowed land, and it is the purpose of the forthcoming convention to emphasize to secure the cooperation of our national government in the reclamation of a plan by which many thousands of acres of the lands above alluded to will be reclaimed from the tidalism of water and put under the influence of sunlight.

As Texas has no government land its swampy areas and lands subject to overflow must be reclaimed under the provisions of the state law authorizing the formation of drainage districts. Several of these districts have already been formed in East Texas, and the work of reclamation, as it progresses, is adding several thousand acres to the agricultural producing capacity of the state. There are many thousand acres, however, as yet untouched by the uterine machine of the levee builders, and the fact that these exist in a primeval condition is a sufficient reason for the presence of a Texas delegation.—Fort Worth Record.

FUNERAL OF FRANK SHIELDS.

A Fine Tribute to the Character of the Deceased.

The funeral services over the remains of brother Frank Shields were held in the Baptist church at Prairie Valley on Tuesday, November 9th at 4 P. M. At the hour appointed a large congregation assembled in the church to pay the last tribute of respect to their departed friend and neighbor. Among those attending the services were eleven of the twelve surviving children of the deceased, and relatives and friends from Greenville and other parts of Hunt county.

The funeral services were conducted by Rev. D. H. Jesse of Greenville, a former pastor, according to special request made by brother Shields a short time before his death.

The services consisted in the reading of several passages of scripture, appropriate comments made thereon by Rev. Jesse, and a brief review of the life and Christian experience of Mr. Shields. At the close of the service, according to special request made by Mr. Shields before his death, the congregation sang the familiar hymn, "There's a Great Day Coming" and "How Firm a Foundation."

After the services in the church were concluded, the W. O. W. camp of Prairie Valley, assisted by several visiting Woodmen from Greenville, took charge of the remains, and conducted the services at the grave in accordance with the beautiful and impressive ritual of that order. Messrs. R. L. Davidson and S. L. Arnold of the Greenville camp officiated as readers in the service. Mr. Shields having his membership in that camp at his death.

H. D. Thompson, according to special request made by Mr. Shields, delivered a short address at the grave, which he gave in brief outline the life and character of the deceased as a Christian and Woodman.

Mr. Frank Shields was the son of Mr. Shields and Penelope Shields, and was born in Pike County, Alabama, September 27, 1852. He moved with his parents to Hunt County, Texas, in 1868. Professed religion and joined the Missionary Baptist church at a young age in 1881. He was married to Miss A. A. Ross in Hunt county, December 18, 1884, and she, with twelve of the thirteen children born of this union, survive him.

Mr. Shields was one of a family of several brothers who were tall in stature, some of them being over seven feet, and were large in proportion to their height. They were generally known throughout the country as "The Texas Giants." There is only one brother surviving.

Mr. Shields was large in heart as well as in body, and he was known and loved by the people generally on account of the kindness and
