From the Daily Picayune, New Orleans, of June 20, we clip notice of the death of Colonel Marshall J. Smith, a hero of two wars—the Mexican and civil war:

Colonel Marshall J. Smith, the well-known insurance agent, died early yesterday morning at his home on Camp street, near Second street.

About ten days ago the venerable citizen, nearly fourscore years of age, was stricken with paralysis, and from the very beginning of that illness his condition was deemed hopeless. But for his remarkably strong constitution his death would have been a question of a few hours, instead of lingering, as he did for over one week on the confines of eternity.

Everything that enlightened medical science could do was attempted to save him, but the stroke was too severe, and the inevitable result came, striking deeply into the innermost sensibilities of loving children and grandchildren, and causing sorrow among all those who knew Colonel Smith and appreciated his many excellent qualities of heart and hand.

He was not only a valued citizen and business man, but his career as a soldier, his record as an officer in the United States Navy, and later on as a commander in the Confederate army, entitled him to a high place in the annals of his country. He was a veteran of the Mexican war and of the civil war and his deeds while in active service in both contests have been written on the brightest pages of history.

Colonel Smith came to this city, from Mobile, fifty years ago, and ever since has conducted himself as to merit the esteem and confidence of all whom he had occasion to meet, whether in social or business associations. He was a successful merchant here long before the civil war, and, after having served the Confederacy throughout the four years of strife, he came back to this city and engaged in mercantile pursuits until 1872, when he went into the insurance agency and built up a prosperous business to the day of his death. Though nearly 80 years of age, Colonel Smith was hale and hearty until the final stroke of paralysis overtook him last week.

The war between the States caused Colonel Smith to abandon his business and to enlist in the cause of the South. Early in 1862 there was an urgent demand for troops on account of the Federal success in Kentucky and Tennessee. He took a prominent part in organizing the twenty-fourth Louisiana volunteers, known as the Crescent Regiment, which was mustered in for ninety days, March 6, 1862, under his command as colonel.

At the battle of Shiloh he and his regiment were distinguished on the first day for their part in the capture of Prentiss' Federal Division, and on the second day they made a gallant charge in support of the Washington Artillery, saving three of its guns from capture. After this, Colonel Smith, on account of bad health, resigned the regiment and went on sick leave to Mississippi. After remaining in Mississippi a while he went on to Richmond, and while there was commissioned lieutenant colonel of artillery, and ordered to Fort Hudson and assigned to the important duty of chief of heavy artillery.

When Farragut's fleet attempted to run by on the night of March 14, 1863, he was present in the batteries during the whole of the engagement, and directed the firing with conspicuous skill, coolness and energy, having previously arranged the ammunition and given full instruction in reference to the firing of each gun. The result was that only the Hartford and a small vessel succeeded in passing. The Mississippi on board of which Admiral Dewey then was a lieutenant, was disabled and burned and the others turned back. It is worthy of special note that Colonel Smith while in the United States Navy in the war with Mexico was an officer on the Mississippi.

During the siege of Port Hudson by the army of General Banks, from May 24 to July 9, 1863, he continued in command of the heavy artillery, effectively aiding in holding the enemy at bay until, influenced by the fall of Vicksburg and the sufferings of the garrison, it became advisable to surrender. He was made prisoner and was sent to Ft. McHenry, and was in captivity fourteen months until, with seventy-five officers, he was sent to the bay at Charleston and exchanged. He served in front of Richmond until the close of the war.

Colonel Smith came back to New Orleans and engaged in the bagging and ties business until 1872, when he opened an insurance agency, and in a few years had become prominent among insurance men in the city.

With Colonel Smith in the Crescent Regiment were J. A. Fiedler, and W. F. Jones of this city at battle of Shiloh, also I. L. Henriques, now in San Francisco, and Charlie Postlethwait, and James, Hoban, both dead for many years.

Col. E. W. Taylor will go to Boston, Mass. with the G. A. R. The following is clipped from the Fort Worth Telegram from the proceedings:

The most interesting feature of the proceeding of Lee camp, United Confederate Veterans, yesterday was the action taken on the invitation received from the Grand Army of the Republic of Boston, asking that the camp send a representative to a reception to be given in Boston during the national encampment of the Grand Army.

The invitation was given due consideration by the Confederates, and was discussed favorably by several of the veterans yesterday. Commander Taylor said that there was much more in the movement than appears on the surface, and he thought that Lee camp should take favorable action on the invitation and designate some one to attend the Boston meeting.

"It means reconciliation among the Confederate and Federal soldiers and will be the means of doing much good," said Colonel Taylor.

After the matter was discussed at some length it was decided that Commander Taylor should go to Boston as the representative of Lee camp. He was appointed and will probably be present.

Clothing.

But a little separates "almost" from "altogether," and yet like the little word "if" it's big in its significance. If we sell you a suit of clothes, a pair of shoes, a shirt, a necktie it doesn't mean almost satisfactory, it must be altogether right. If you have not tested it, your money back if you want it. keeps you from all harm. If you have tested it and found it wanting it's your own fault if you haven't come back for your money.

J. J. SEGAL.

News was received over the phone by Mrs. McNeely from Capt. McNeely at Houston, last Saturday that he had had an accident to his motor car while taking a doctor out to a man, and he had got his arm hurt at elbow and a small bone broken. We are sorry of the accident but are glad to learn that he is getting along alright.

To My Friends and Patrons.

Having been elected supervisor of music in the city school, I wish to enroll my pupils for the ensuing term, and will be pleased to have them communicate with me either in person or by phone.

Very cordially.

News has reached relatives here of the death of little Louie, son of Angelo Corti and wife in Italy, which occurred on the sixth. The child pulled a kettle of hot water over on itself and was so badly scalded that it died after lingering for a week after the accident.

Friends here sympathize with the parents in their loss.

Begin by telling when you settled in your present home, how much land you own, rent or work. Give the present value per acre of improved and unimproved land now and ten years ago. Tell whether the land is prairie or timber. Give an idea of the character of the soil, whether it is sandy loam or clay. Tell what kind of crops you raise, how much and what kinds of live stock, the social, school and church advantages, whether or not fruit does well and the kinds most commonly grown, and any other items which would interest prospective settlers, or people looking for homes, including a brief statement of how you started and have prospered, if you wish to do this latter, though it is not essential.

Payment of the $500 in prizes is guaranteed by the "old reliable" Orange Judd Farmer of Chicago. The articles should be sent direct to The JIMPLECUTE, accompanied by $1.50 for a subscription to The JIMPLECUTE and Orange Judd Farmer for one year. The best of the articles will be printed in the JIMPLECUTE, as fast as space permits, and every article sent in will be forwarded by us to the Orange Judd Farmer, to be judged by its land commission in awarding the $500 in prizes.

PAINT POINTERS.

Good paint, properly applied, is always worth more to you than it costs no matter what you pay for it. When you are able to get paints at the prices we put on them your profit is still further increased. Another thing to remember is that good paints yield a very small profit to any dealer and for that reason in many localities only the inferior profit yielding kinds are sold.

We handle none but the very best goods; could not afford to sell anything else. We have an immense assortment; paints for every purpose and is every shade.

Lead and Oil, Dry Colors, Mixed Paints, Buggy Paints, Floor Paints, Family Paints, Wood Stains, Enamels, Varnishes, Paint Brushes, and everything that goes with the paint line.
