Arrangements for the great convention of the Laymen's Missionary Movement to be held in Houston February 18-20 are rapidly being completed and all indications point to the assembling of the greatest body of religious laymen that has ever taken place in the state. The movement is non-sectarian and non-denominational in character, and has the unqualified indorsement of all the Protestant evangelical churches of America. Conventions are now being held in a large number of American cities by the laymen of various churches, for the purpose of creating more interest in foreign missions and carrying out the plan of "evangelizing the world in this generation," which is the slogan of the laymen's forces.
