WHITNEY AS A LANDHOLDER.
 Late Financier an Extensive Owner of Forest Preserves.
 NOTED FOR THEIR SIZE AND BEAUTY

His Park of 90,000 Acres in the Adirondacks Contains Sixty-four Lakes and Many Beautiful Camps—Large Game Preserves Maintained in His Adirondack and Berkshire Hills Estates.

The late William C. Whitney, sportsman, financier and former secretary of the navy, was the owner of two of the largest and finest private forest preserves in the United States, says the New York Tribune. One was known as the Whitney park, in the Adirondacks, mostly in Hamilton county, and the other was the October Mountain preserve, near Lenox, Mass. Mr. Whitney's first purchases for his park in the Adirondacks were made about eight years ago, when as a member of the Hamilton Park club he went into that region to hunt and fish.

The park of 90,000 acres is now of great value. Scattered over it are sixty-four lakes and many beautiful camps. The largest lake is nearly six miles long and about two wide, with an elevation of 1,728 feet above tide. There are several islands scattered through it, and it has pleasant winding shores well forested. In clear weather the main peaks of the Adirondacks, forty miles away, stand out clearly defined against the eastern horizon. The surrounding forests have not been injured by fire, and the use of the ax has been careful. The dark foliage of the conifers extends in every direction, and Norway pines are conspicuous along the lake and in its vicinity.

At Little Tupper lake is the lodge of the superintendent, Ernest Halsey Johnson. It is a cottage, amply provided with fireplaces, cozy sleeping apartments, spacious parlors, dining rooms and kitchen and is modern in all its fittings. Not far from the lodge and facing the lake is a building which is interesting because of its historical associations. It is the old hotel once conducted by Pliny Martin, who was able in the early days of the region to attract sportsmen to make the journey to Little Tupper lake from Plattsburg, a distance of over sixty miles through the forest.

There is a remarkable spring near the falls on the west side of the lake, and it remains a favorite stopping place for guides and sportsmen. As one leaves Big Tupper lake on the journey toward Little Tupper the vista over the falls down the lake is said by many Adirondack travelers to be without equal in the whole region. The Bog river has its source in the Whitney park and forms an interesting ride. Owing to the discoloration of its water the most remarkable reflections may be seen on its dark, mirrorlike surface. Every leaf and tree, tint and color, mound and rock along its shores is reflected on its surface with surprising accuracy.

Leaving the Bog river at the junction of the two branches of the stream, the boats ascend the left hand stream on their way to Little Tupper lake. After a short distance there is a carry. Round pond, in the Whitney preserve, a body of water two miles long, whose outline approaches a circle more closely than any other of the many ponds and lakes known by this name. From Round pond Little Tupper lake is reached by ascending a narrow, crooked inlet called "The Slang," a word taken from the guides' vocabulary. It winds through a tamarack swamp for about a mile, and then the boat passes under a quaint bridge constructed of bowlders and logs. The inlet and outlet of Little Tupper lake are only a few hundred feet apart.

While the center of activity is at the lodge of the superintendent at Little Tupper lake, the finest camps on the park are on the Forked lakes. The clubhouse on Little Forked is one of the most elaborate of its kind in the woods. The striking beauty of Forked lake is its growth of cedar forests. It is five miles long and irregular in shape, with deep indentations in its northern shore, in addition to the peculiar parting at one point from which it gets its name. In addition to the cedars, there are many tall white pines of the first growth.

Little Forked lake is far from the line of travel, and the wild conditions are seldom disturbed, and one often sees deer feeding on the shore. A large number of men are employed on the park throughout the year. The duties of some of them are to protect the shooting and fishing from poachers, and the others are engaged in lumbering operations. Telephone wires stretching for miles through the forest connect the lodge of the superintendent with the houses of the game protectors scattered among the lakes and ponds on the preserve and the camps at Little Forked and Big Forked lakes.

The lakes and streams teem with fish, and the supply is kept up by a fish hatchery. The preserve is overrun with deer, and Mr. Whitney sent to it larger game, including moose from Canada and beaver. The twenty elk turned loose at Forked lake by the state a few years ago were well cared for in the Whitney park. In the Whitney forests about 5,000 or 6,000 acres are cut over each year and the spruce, pine and balsam above ten inches in size three feet from the ground removed. All the hemlock and for about 200 feet from the shore lines of each lake the first growth timber is left standing. The conifers on the tops of the hills, which, if removed, would leave an opening for the wind, are also left.

Mr. Whitney was the largest property owner in Massachusetts. He owned 10,000 acres of land in Washington, Lee and Lenox, in the Berkshire hills, where he had one of the largest game preserves in the east. Mr. Whitney's agents began buying property on October mountain, one of the most slightly pieces in the Berkshire hills, as far back as 1895. So quietly were the purchases made that it was not until buying had been going on for eight months that it became known that some one was attempting to acquire vast holdings. In 1896 an order was sent to his Lenox agents for the construction of a camp on the mountain. It was to be built and furnished in thirty days. With feverish excitement contractors began work. Hundreds of laborers and carpenters were employed, and by working day and night, by the aid of calcium lights at night, a large and expensive camp was completed in contract time. Then came the announcement from Newport that Harry Payne Whitney and his bride, Miss Gertrude Vanderbilt, were to occupy the camp on their honeymoon.

The development of the mountain into a game preserve followed. From Jackson's Hole, in Wyoming, car loads of elk and blacktail deer were shipped to Lenox. These were followed by buffalo, moose and Angora goats. A quail and pheasant breeding farm was established, and for several seasons in the fall Mr. and Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney entertained shooting parties on the mountain.

FIREPROOF STAGE DRESSES.

Chicago Theater Disaster Leads to Strict Precautions Abroad.
 One result of the Iroquois theater disaster in Chicago is that the scenery, dresses and accessories of the Alhambra ballet in London, recently produced, are thoroughly fireproof, says the Chicago Record-Herald. An experiment showed that the ballet dancers' skirts, apparently consisting of the flimsiest material, would not burn even when exposed to a powerful gas flame. Since the fire of the Iroquois theater in Chicago the authorities of Milan have adopted measures for the safety of the patrons of the great theater of La Scala, one of the largest and most ancient in the world. Every evening as soon as the performance is over and also between the acts all the emergency exits are thrown open, and the public is made to go out by them. The experiment so far has been successful, and the great theater has been emptied in a few minutes.

CATTLE TO MARKET ON SLED

Dakota Farmer Saves Loss of Flesh by Simple Means.
 J. S. Garothun, a successful farmer and stock raiser living in Moody county, south of Sioux Falls, S. D., has invented an ingenious device for marketing his cattle, says the Chicago Record-Herald.

He has constructed a strong pen about 12 by 24 feet in size and 5 feet high. This he fastened on sled runners at each end. There is a gate through which the animals may be driven upon the platform. Horses are hitched to this moving fence, or corral, and his cattle are marketed in this manner.

The advantage is that they can be transferred from his feeding pens to the market point with less fatigue than if they were driven overland, thus keeping them in better condition and making them easier to handle.
