TEXANS "CARRYING COALS TO NEWCASTLE."

The old saw about "carrying coals to Newcastle" was never employed with more perfect application than in the effort to show the poor business of shipping Texas products north and east thousands of miles, and paying the freight each way, together with a profit to the manufacturer, the wholesaler and the retailer, instead of turning them into the finished article at home. This is particularly striking in the case of the shipment of cotton, more so in the case of hides and furs, and possibly still more so in the case of hard woods for furniture making. But the most unnecessary, it seems to us, of all such business is the buying of train loads and ship loads of canned fruits and vegetables in the north and east, having them shipped to Texas, paying freight and profit to dealers, while our own go to destruction in the orchards, fields and gardens.

In the matter of cotton it may be argued with some effect that it requires large capital to build cotton mills, and the same may be said with less weight of argument with regard to the tanning of hides; but such arguments cannot hold good in the case of canned goods. Canneries can be built on a large or small scale, from the little "home canner" with a capacity of a hundred or so cans a day to the larger concerns of practically unlimited capacity. Indeed, every farmer, gardener and orchardist can pack his own crop, and thus in some measure supply the demands of his friends and fellow citizens, keeping the money in the state and supplying labor for thousands at a time when they would otherwise likely not be busy.

The following dispatch to the News from Baltimore, Md., a few days ago shows to what extent the shipment of canned goods into Texas from the northeastern states is carried on—to the extent of making the hauling of the goods to Texas a business of great proportions for the steamship lines:

Baltimore, Md., Aug. 11.—A battle royal, in which three large steamship firms will participate, is being contemplated for the capture of Baltimore's southern canned goods shipments to Galveston, Texas.

W. W. Tingle, local agent of the Mallory and Clyde steamship lines, acknowledged today that the Mallory and Morgan lines were contemplating placing several steamers on the Baltimore and Galveston route during the canned goods season and in all probability a service from either one of these lines would be maintained afterward, provided there was sufficient offering of freight.

Baltimore is the center of the canned goods trade, and as large consignments of canned products are annually shipped to Texas, the transportation end has been a fine plum eagerly sought by the lines plying to that section. The inauguration a few months ago of the Baltimore and Texas Steamship company placed a new Richmond in the field, which has resulted in the two New York lines taking up the matter.

The News has for years been pointing out the advantages to be gained to the people of Texas by manufacturing their own cotton, tanning the hides of Texas cattle and other animals, manufacturing their own furniture, making their own butter by the establishment of creameries and the canning of their own fruits and vegetables. Meanwhile quite a number of successful cotton mills have been established, a number of creameries have been built and more are being built, a great number of canneries, large and small, have been put up, but these do not, in any material degree, come any way near supplying the demand. There is no apparent reason why, at least in the cases of creameries and canneries, it should be necessary for Texas people to send to the north and east for butter or canned goods.

Let the Texas farmer and men in all lines of business "think upon these things."—Dallas News.

Brethren, what are we going to do about an exhibit for the Dallas Fair? We really should not neglect this very important matter.

Even Colorado cannot afford more ideal nights than we are having in East Texas at this time. It is great to live in such a country.

There are some very ugly weed patches abutting the streets in a number of places over the city. It should be somebody's business to get rid of them.

All of the churches of the city extend cordial invitations to citizens and visitors to attend their services on Sunday. And it is worth while to accept such invitations.

The governor has signed Palestine's amended charter bill, and as soon as the law becomes operative the suburban saloon will be a thing of the past. And let's not forget that the credit for this move rests upon Anderson county's member of the legislature.

The Herald reproduces an editorial from the Dallas News today that should be food for thought for our people. Thousands upon thousands of bushels of fine peaches rotted in the fields this year because our people were not prepared to handle them. Read the News article and think it over.

This is our town, brethren, and it is up to us to make it the very best town possible, socially, morally and commercially. What are we doing? Are we overlooking any opportunities? The shortcomings cannot be laid at the door of any one man or any set of men, but if there is fault it is a community fault. Every citizen is responsible to his degree for the conditions here.

A remedy in law to prevent bankruptcy in railroads and the resultant receiverships and loss to creditors might be found in a bill making it a penalty to divert the funds of the road except where the funds so diverted are shown to be clean profit. It is a habit often practiced to rob one road to take care of more pressing needs of the same system, often resulting in practical bankruptcy to the road robbed.

BIG CROWD HEARD THEM

Debate at the Socialist Encampment Proved of Interest—Dr. Andrews Spoke Today.

Last evening at the Socialist encampment at Cartmell's Lake Park, a large crowd heard the debate between Mr. T. A. Hickey, author and lecturer on socialism, and Prof. J. G. H. Buck, county superintendent of instruction, and a Henry Georgeite. The speakers consumed about two hours in presenting their theories of government, etc., and were listened to attentively.

Today at 10:30 Rev. Reddin Andrews, candidate for governor on the socialist ticket, spoke. This gentleman left on the 1:25 train for his home at Tyler.

Miss O'Reilly spoke at 3 o'clock this afternoon, and again tonight will be the speaker, her subject for tonight being "The Woman Question."

Miss O'Reilly is a native Texan, born and reared to womanhood in San Saba county; she is an attractive, modest little woman, with very sweet and frank features, and carries in her head a fund of information and good sense. She entertains and instructs in her talks. Some years ago she left her Texas home, and found employment with Chicago schools, soon becoming one of the best known of Chicago's school teachers. Then she became interested in socialism, and has since spent much of her time speaking before audiences over the country.

has ever visited Palestine will be here for the occasion, while hundreds of farmers and their families from Anderson and adjoining counties will also be present. Low rates have been granted by all railroads, and it is believed that a special train will be secured from Trinity, arriving here shortly before 9 o'clock, in plenty of time for the parade. Many letters are being received, and the celebration is being well advertised throughout East Texas.

The celebration will be held at the Michaux Grove, and the grounds will be cleared and put in shape for the occasion. Plenty of seats will be provided, while all kinds of privileges have been let and everything sold on the grounds will be of the best and at moderate prices.

The Street Parade.

The grand street parade, which starts promptly at 10 o'clock, will be over a mile in length, and will be in charge of Mr. W. B. Riley, grand marshal of the day. The parade will form on Oak street on account of its great length, and efforts will be made to have Spring street cleared for the countermarch.

Mr. R. L. Rodgers, at one time on the police force, will be the assistant marshal, while the following gentlemen have been chosen by Mr. Riley to act as deputy grand marshals: W. H. Calcote of the Farmers' Union, Tony Lamb of the Railroad Equipment Painters, W. M. David of the Carpenters' Union, Harvey Morrow of the Boilermakers' Union, and W. G. Floyd of the Painters, Paperhangers and Decorators' Union.

The following is the line-up of the parade so far. However, this is not Enterprise Wall Paper and Paint House.

Wyatt, McInnis & Denby. Airdome Theatre. Elkhart Band.

Any others wishing to take part in the parade should send in their names as soon as possible to W. B. Riley or A. M. Cohen, as the official formation of the parade will be made soon. Several other labor unions are yet to come in, while it is expected that others will ask for places in the parade within the next few days.

Several handsome prizes will be awarded to winners in the parade, and these will be placed on exhibition within the next few days.

Queen's Crown.

The Misses Brazleton of the Hodges Dry Goods Store will make the crown to be worn by the Queen this year, and it will be the handsomest of any of the recent celebrations. The prizes to be given will also be pretty, and will be placed on exhibition with the crown at Swift's Store a few days before the close of the contest.

Merchants to Decorate.

Many merchants are assuring the chairman of the celebration that they will decorate their places of business on Labor Day, and it is hoped that the decorating will be general, and that everybody will display flags, etc., at their places of business before the morning trains come in with the visitors.

The Balloon Ascension.

Prof. Roddy, with headquarters at Waco, will make the ascension this year, and writes that he expects to go even higher than last year before making his thrilling parachute leap. In all probability he will have a larger balloon this year, and this feature of the celebration should interest both old and young. The ascension is scheduled for 4:45 p. m., but it will take about an hour for the big balloon to fill with gas; this is a very interesting feature of the ascension.
