pre-emption and homestead laws and kindred acts.

We pledge ourselves to the prosecution and punishment of criminals, public and private, without regard to their political faith or position.

We admit with pain and regret that the action of the men who for years have controlled the republican party have not been such as to command public confidence, and the principal object which we have in view is to remove the control of the party organization from all sinister influences.

We believe that with respect to corporations, railway and others, doing business in New Mexico, a jealous supervision should be exercised, and that their influence in the affairs of the territory should be steadily resisted, without seeking to deprive them of the enjoyment of any lawful right which they may have acquired. We insist that they shall have no greater privilege than the citizen enjoys in his individual capacity.

We favor such legislation by congress as shall secure protection to the industries of our country, and especially to the wool, stock and mining industries.

Again reaffirming our devotion to the grand and undying principles upon which the republican party is founded, disclaiming aught but an unselfish desire to promote those principles, and to secure an administration in harmony therewith, we appeal to the people of New Mexico to support us in securing the accomplishment of the purposes herein announced, and to that end we call upon them to support by their votes and influence Colonel William L. Ryerson, whom we present as a delegate to the Forty-ninth congress, and as the embodiment of the principles and purposes herein announced, confident of the justice of the position we have assumed, relying upon the intelligence and honesty of our people and upon their desire to emancipate themselves from the domination of a corrupt and selfish combination, we confidently expect them to rally to our support.

The United States Investor has decided to offer $1,000 in prizes for essays of not more than one column each respecting American cities and towns.

We take pleasure in announcing that the following distinguished gentlemen have consented to act as judges to award these prizes:

Hon. H. C. Lodge, of Mass., Hon. Chas. F. Crisp, of Georgia, Hon. J. C. Burrows, of Michigan.

The prizes will be subdivided as follows: For the best essay respecting any American city or town, $500; for the second best essay respecting any American city or town, $300; for the third best essay respecting any American city or town, $200.

Each essay is to deal with the merits of the city or town chosen as its subject, either as a desirable place of residence; as affording opportunities for investment; as a place of peculiar location; as a place of unusual rapid growth; as a place in which an unusually large amount of capital and labor is employed in any particular industry; as a place possessed of great undeveloped resources, such as water power, coal and iron, etc., which is peculiar because it has long escaped attention; or as possessing great historical interest; or as possessing any other claim to unique interest or special distinction.

In awarding the prizes, the judges will consider the literary merits of the essays, as well as the merits of the town or city described. They will not, however, go outside the essay itself for information or evidence that the town or city possesses any special interest. Any claims which even a well known city may have to distinction within the intent upon which these prizes are offered must rest wholly upon what is said by the essayist within the space of the column allotted to him.

This condition, together with the consideration of literary merit will give the essayists even chances. All the essays which are intended for competition should be marked as such and forwarded to either of the offices of the United States Investor, 19 Pearl street, Boston; 835 Broadway, New York; 241 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

Getting Back Home.

Saw you ever a place in your wanderings quite so beautiful, one-half so comfortable, one tenth so welcome and one-hundredth part so dear as this plain looking house, with the dusty doorsteps, the close barred shutters, an area lawn not six feet wide, and a lovely garden in the back yard paved with bricks? The very dog, delighted to get home, makes a rush for his kennel, a thousand laudations to the minutes in his vibrant tail. With nervous eagerness he flutters here and there, investigating dismantled caches of half remembered bones, while now and then a yelp of indignant remonstrance announces the discovery that much despised and intensely hated cats have had the outrageous effrontery to invade his domain during his absence. In the greater house, with much the same dismay, the good wife, foolishly seeking for things she does not wish to find, proclaims the invasion of the moths. What a nervous tension in every heart as the good man, trying with most stupid transparency to veil his own eagerness under a clumsy assumption of deliberation, unlocks the front door!

Everybody says, "Oh, pa, we could have had it open fifty times!" So could he if he wasn't so eager to get in. When it is opened just wide enough for one person to squeeze through at a time the entire family make a rush to march in abreast. The household flows through the long deserted rooms like a living torrent, a torrent and a half, or two torrents. Vainly does the commander-in-chief endeavor, by word of command and clutch of hand, to restrain the household troops. They will be well disciplined garrison in a day or two; for now they are rather lawless invaders. It is her natural desire to have the first look in every room, to make the first orderly investigation in every quarter. —Robert J. Barretto in Ladies' Home Journal.

Dromedary Live Preservers.

"I don't see how that humpedbacked man can be so venturesome." "That is, he isn't humpedbacked at all. That's only one of these live preserver bathing suits. That part of the jersey under the arms and across the back can be inflated and acts as a drowning preventive." And so it was, but the wearer seemed completely deformed, and it is not likely that the style of suit will ever become popular, since those who are good swimmers scorn such assistance, and those who are not don't go out far enough to feel the need of it. Still every once in a while one of these suits appears, and occasionally a young woman with a regular figure is seen straggling over along the beach and under arms goes into the water. One such was seen recently, and as she did not go out above her knees in the surf the reason of its wearing was not very apparent. It made her look so conspicuous that in many ways it was a life preserver for a young woman with a life preserver. —Cor. Philadelphia Press.

Slaughter of Small Bass.

Mr. W. L. Powell, treasurer of the Pennsylvania fish commission, sends an account of the depletion of Malheur creek by fishermen, who catch hundreds of yearling black bass with small hooks. A veteran angler fished this stream recently with a fly rod, and in the course of a day took sixty bass ranging from 4 1/2 to 6 inches in length. All of them were big hooked and were liberated alive. The creek was full of yearling bass during July, and newspaper accounts mentioned their capture by the hundred by means of hooks so small as to be readily swallowed by the fish. The absence of big bass even in moderate numbers is notorious, but in the light of this information it is readily explained. —Forest and Stream.

The Irish Terrier Now in Favor.

Every dog has his day, and the Irish terrier at length has his. He is now all the vogue in London, and one can only wonder why he was so long about "coming in," for with his beautiful eyes and pretty head he is beyond question one of the wisest of the canine tribe. He is an "all round" dog, ready for a romp with the children or a rat hunt. He takes to the water like a duck, is "all there" in the field, and is a splendid expeller, flushing and retrieving beautifully, and as any man will tell you from Kill to Comaught, he is "a darling with the rabbits." He ought to be proud of himself today, for his market value ranges from ten to twenty pounds. —Pall Mall Gazette.

Sharing Their House with Bees.

In a farmhouse between Marcellus and Elizabethtown there is a curiosity. Between the plastering and the siding of the house at one joint there is a vacant space, which for the past three seasons has been utilized for living purposes by a colony of bees. The colony has grown to such an extent that on a warm summer day it is sometimes unsafe to drive horses in the yard near them. The family living in the house expect to make repairs in the fall, and they estimate that they will harvest 200 pounds of honey from their novel hive. —Cortland (N. Y.) Standard and Journal.

A Difference of Opinion.

The "old man" was in his shirt sleeves, smoking a short pipe and trying to read a paper. The "old woman" was looking at herself in a broken mirror and giving every evidence of self satisfaction. "Mike," she asked at last, "dy you think I look like a leddy?" "Not a bit," he replied shortly. "Well, there's others thinks different," she replied. "I got a letter today from one of them habit makers." "You don't need any. You've got enough now." "Well, I'm thankin heaven they're not as bad as yours, and there's none of 'em swell people would look the likes of you up an see you 'way back, an' see, Mary Ann, I know you gave it to that felle that was 'round here to put your name in the Blue Book, an' you could be in swell company an' get circ'lars tellin you how you can get a middlin fair dress to 'weck windin' in for $100. The next time I give you 'no dollars it'll be fifty cents." —St. Paul Pioneer Press.

Imposing on a Bald Head.

The average barber is a pretty cheeky person, but it is seldom that he has the assurance to deliberately make use of a customer's head and face, to say nothing of time, to further his selfish ends. A good natured man on whose sparsely fringed head a silk shirtless suit with appropriate grace took his seat in a "barber's" shop. The barber, with his hair-trim and a shave. There were four barbers at work in the shop and just four customers. The artist in whose care the good natured man found himself did his work in a very satisfactory manner. He handled the scissors deftly and proved to be a thorough master of a keen edged razor. After the boy run, the powder and the brilliantine had been successively administered the barber unheeded the small sheet in which he had wrapped his customer, and was just on the point of removing it when the eye caught sight of a man in the doorway of the shop. The newcomer was one of those puff, red faced persons such as no barber likes to touch. This cheeky barber therefore pressed significantly on the shoulder of his good natured customer, reminded the sheet, took out his scissors and razor and diligently shaved the hair on the crown of the head, and then he applied more lard and powder and fussed about until one of the other chairs was vacated and the red faced man had actually taken possession of it. Then with much ceremony and a loud call for "brush the hair" the good natured customer with a smile and just the suggestion of a wink. —New York Times.

Captain Steamboat Around the Horn.

Captain John Thompson, master of the steamer Cumberland, International line, relates a remarkable incident of Maine's early contributions to the Pacific coast. Shortly following the gold fever of 1849, in the years 1850-1, the steamer S. B. Wheeler, a sidewheel wooden craft of medium tonnage, was built at Eastport, Me. The vessel was owned by the late Mr. C. S. Cross, where the town of Calais, Me., and St. Stephens, N. B., stood on opposite sides of the river, was built the Fannie. The Fannie was constructed with a detachable stern, this part being secured by screwbolts, and after completion the stern was towed to Eastport, Thompson forming one of the crew of tow.

At Eastport the stern was removed and the craft sank. While submerged the steambot was floated in; then the Fannie was raised, stern secured, her hull into the water, and the vessel was steamed by ballast and freight, the masts of the bark stepped, two of them passing directly through the steambot, her rigging and sails supplied, and out of the Passamaquoddy she sailed around the Horn to San Francisco. Passage was made in the winter of 1851, in those days, and the cabin of the steambot afforded extra facilities.

The Fannie arrived safely in California, where the same plan of submerging liberated the steambot, and for many years it ran on the Sacramento river, the first steambot in California waters. —Republican Journal.

A Bee Six Feet from "Tip to Tip."

Wouldn't you like to see a honey bee as large or larger than the average ones? There is just such a creature in the specimen room of the University of Pennsylvania at Philadelphia. It is the largest insect of its class ever seen in this or any other country. Its wings are as broad as those of an eagle and its honey-bag of twenty pounds capacity. Its legs are also large and well supported, reminding one of the necked supporters of a piano stool of yore. The proboscis, which is attached to a head the bigness of a candy bucket, is over a foot in length and as big around as a human hand. I know that you are wondering where he ever found clover-heads large enough to work on, and who provided a million of similar sized specimens with a hive in which to store their tons of honey, but there is no use exciting your curiosity further—he never gathered honey; never "improved each shining hour" in fact, he never laid hours to improve!

So it is in France, where neither centaurs nor years count, but only minutes and seconds, the shock of contraries and the rapidity of reaction. The French must always be fighting about something—even for Bellen against Bonard, and for Nonotte against Voltaire. Printers' ink must smell of powder, otherwise it's not French thought, and Victor Hugo's visit to Charles is typical. —Theodore Child in Harper's.

Some Striking Facial Similarities.

Professor Galton, illustrating the strong likeness which often exists between members of the same family, reports the following facts: "One boy sometimes spoke to himself in a looking glass, thinking that he was talking to his brother. A little girl whose mother and aunt were twins often called her aunt 'mother,' and her mother 'mother,' so much alike were those ladies." "On one occasion when I returned from foreign service," says a British officer, "my father turned to me and said, 'I thought you were in London,' thinking I was my brother; yet he had not seen me for nearly four years." —London Tit-Bits.

More Than One Head.

An Englishman at the Hotel Athenaeum asked a bell boy to bring him some good gum. A stick of the boy's favorite article was procured, the boy assuring our English friend that it was unsurpassed. To the bell boy's astonishment, the purchaser began to rub a piece of manuscript with the gum. After a few seconds of vain rubbing he asked how we use gum in America. It took some time to convince him that in America an eraser is not "a gum." —Chautauqua Herald.

George's Recklessness.

At Athens a large number of English sparrows are killed every day, cooked nicely and sold at ten cents apiece. It is said that they are fine eating. —Savannah News.

A novel wager on the result of the coming election in St. Augustine, Fla., a few days ago. The parties to the agreement are an ex-mayor and a real estate agent. In case of Cleveland's election the ex-mayor is to push the real estate agent in a wheelbarrow on the sea wall from the fort to Central base, and in case of Harrison's election the real estate agent is to do likewise to the ex-mayor. The date of the performance will be fixed so as to allow the throngs of visitors next winter to witness it. The two gentlemen are to be attached by a rope, so that in case of a mishap if one goes over the wall the other must follow. —Chicago Herald.

Adding Insult to Injury.

"Talk about adding insult to injury," said Loveman as with the aid of a heavy cane he hobnobbed his favorite seat in the Rounders' club the other afternoon. "Something happened to me last night that added insult to that direction so far as my experience goes. I dined some friends of mine from out of town last evening. They were old college chums, you know, and as we had not met for years we lingered long over the table, and the loving cup was passed steadily around until my friends had to leave for a midnight train. It was a very hot night. I was very much befuddled, and, as is my custom on such occasions, I turned my feet Turkish backward. I went down into the hot room, a strong desire came upon me to jump into the big cold plunge there without waiting for the usual scrubbing by the attendant.

"It has been my habit to forego the use of the stairs leading down into the plunge, and to simply get up on the marble railing and fall off backward into the cooling waters. So up on the marble railing I stepped and threw myself off. There was not a solitary drop of water in that plunge.
