There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address: F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O. Sold by Druggists, etc. Take Hall's Family Pills for constipation.

PEARLS OF PRICE

By IZOLA FORRESTER.

"How much were they worth?" asked Hobart. Gertrude stood near the open fireplace. It was all so unbelievable and stupid. There were only five in the house besides herself and Hobart—the Kincaids, whom they had known for years; Sewall Tate, Florrie Tate, his sister, and Granger Fredericks, Hobart's best friend.

"About ten thousand, I think, Barty. Father never puts a price tag on anything, you know, but he bought them for mother at Venice when they were on their honeymoon. I wore them only Friday night and—and I think I put them in the little jewel drawer of my dressing table."

"Without a lock?" "I've never locked up anything here. It can't be any guest, and I know it isn't the servants."

"Are you sure you lost them after you had taken them off—that they didn't slip off your neck somewhere?" "But I only wore them that evening, dear, and we didn't go out of the house. If they had slipped off, we'd have found them somewhere. You don't think—"

His eyes met hers questioningly. "Sewall?" "He's seemed kind of moody, don't you think so, Barty?" Hobart shook his head, blowing out smoke from his mouth in rings.

"Not Sewall. He's a regular fellow, Trudie. I'd rather consider even Kincaid losing his head. He's been awfully hard hit the last month. Dropped fifty thousand in two days last week, I heard. That's why I asked them out here—to rest up and get his grip back."

The sound of a chair scraping back out in the sun parlor stopped him. Fredericks came in with his customary smile of splendid, genial good cheer and satisfaction with life.

"Barty," he said, happily, "I'm going to stay here longer than you've asked me to. You can't get rid of me yet awhile. It's the most perfect rest spot I've found since I left California. Kincaid says he's called back to town suddenly, but I'm going to plant my standards."

"Stay as long as you like, old man," answered Hobart heartily. "So Kincaid's going today? He hadn't told me, I'm mighty sorry."

Gertrude could not help looking at him meaningly. It seemed terrible even to suspect in their thoughts quiet Kincaid. Barty had left the room, and she caught Granger eying her with amusement.

"I've never seen you serious before," he said. "Am I serious?" she laughed and sighed at the same time. "Oh, Granger, life's pretty much of a tangle after all, isn't it?"

It was a relief when the last had gone, excepting Fredericks. He sat out in the sun parlor nearly all day long, working on his new play. Hobart had finally settled in his own mind it must have been Kincaid. But Gertrude suspected young Sewall. And, finally, there came out to the beautiful shore-country home a detective.

Hobart was in town, and Gertrude dreaded handling the affair by herself, but she gave all information by degrees, and followed him around the house until they came on Granger in the sun parlor. She introduced the visitor hesitatingly. And Granger stared a minute, stretched out his hand and laughed heartily.

"God bless your heart, Gertrude, I didn't think you'd take it so seriously. Wait a minute, child." He dug into his inner coat pocket and drew out something wrapped in a pocket handkerchief. "There are your pearls all safe and sound. You see, Hobart didn't mention them, and neither did you, and I couldn't tell for the life of me what you meant to do about them, and I could not possibly finish that third act until you did do something definite."

"Third act?" repeated Gertrude. "Granger, what have you done?" "Just experimented," he answered playfully. "I knew neither you nor Barty would mind a bit when you found me out. I've had the very deuce of a time working off my third act, you see, and I've got just this sort of a situation, only the girl steals a necklace of diamonds. But your pearls served quite as well. But there are your pearls."

"Oh, Granger, Granger!" She leaned back against the glass door, holding the pearls and laughing. The detective had stepped back into the library. Fredericks took his favorite seat at the round willow table, and waved his pencil at her happily. "I'm sorry they weren't diamonds," he said. "It might have worked out better. Still, pearls have more character." (Copyright, 1918, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"No!—I Said Calumet!"

"I want what I ask for—I know what it would mean to go home without it. Mother won't take chances—she's sure of Calumet—sure of it, wholesome, tasty bakings—of positive, uniform results—of purity and economy. You try CALUMET Baking Powder—by adding your favorite brand once and you'll never go back to it. Calumet is the world's best Baking Powder—it's moderate in price."
