

Quality Canned Goods

We protect our customers by handling only such brands of canned goods whose makers have high reputations to uphold.

There are numerous poorer grades marketed which we have carefully avoided in selecting for our trade, though we might profit more by stocking them.

The prices of these better grades are low enough to suit all. We handle only the very best of everything in our grocery departments. Miners' supplies of every description.

TEN BIG SHOWS

Much Interest Centers About Next Wednesday's Attraction.

If there is any one particular feature event on the local entertainment calendar that the amusement seeking public of Price is especially looking forward to more than anything else it is probably the scheduled visit here on July 12th, next Wednesday, of the John Robinson ten big shows. Somehow or other there is always a certain fascination in the promised coming of a big tent show that seems to affect old and young alike and the billed exhibition here of the John Robinson circus appears to be no exception to the general rule. Through the last half century or more of years, the cycle of time has wrought many changes in the public taste and fancy, but in its restless evolution there is one form of public entertainment that this same time has not been able to very materially affect or change. The dear old circus, with its sawdust rings and its menagerie, its funny shows and side-shows—all seem to have successfully weathered the gale of the public's ever changing fancies and fashions.

Except bats and there for a slight evidence of modernizing, the circus of today differs little from the shows of the days when we grow up were lit by the boys and girls. The pretty bareback lady makes the circuit of the sawdust ring in quite the same style and manner as did her mother perhaps fifty years ago, the trapeze artist and acrobats have about the same routine of tricks as then, the comers and grotesque comedians of the halcyon days are just as ludicrously funny and quite as much laughed at and enjoyed, but not one iota more so. The huge elephants still eat peanuts from the hands of the youngsters with the same keen relish, and the trunks in the side-show games are just as much as they were. Look at it if you may. It is the same dear old circus—pushed up a little, to be sure, with here and there a new and novel added feature, but always just the same old "white top," nevertheless, and therein probably lies the secret of its remarkable longevity.

It is claimed for the John Robinson shows that the secret of its wonderful longevity, popularity is due chiefly to the recreation and retention of all those time honored ideas and methods that were in vogue away back in the days of hop-along and poke bonnets and which first brought the sawdust ring, the menagerie and the side-show, into public favor. Call them antiquated if you wish, but take away entirely the old time characteristics that made the John Robinson world famous as a tent showman and you'd find that it would cease to be a first-class John Robinson circus.

The arrival here next Wednesday morning will be fittingly and publicly celebrated with a street parade at 10 o'clock on the forenoon.

BEST SUGAR AVERAGE REACHES NEW RECORD

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 2.—Estimates made today by the department of agriculture put the 1915 beet sugar average at 288.500 acres. This is 104,200 more than in 1912 and 224,000 more than in 1911.

FIGHT FOR PROHIBITION.

KETCHUM WINS AT CASTLE GATE

MAY BUILD TRAMWAY AS AT FIRST DESIRED.

Supreme Court Decision of Last Saturday Overrules Demurrer Recently Filed in Carbon Case. By Attorneys For the Utah Fuel and the Pleasant Valley Coal Companies.

An opinion of the supreme court handed down last Saturday gives the Ketchum Coal company a legal victory in its efforts to secure a strip of ground for a tramway across claims of the Utah Fuel company and the Pleasant Valley Coal company at Castle Gate. The Ketchum Coal company had an action in the supreme court against Judge A. H. Christensen, judge of the district court in Carbon county, and the Utah Fuel company and the Pleasant Valley Coal company. A. H. Cowie and J. S. Thompson, executive officers of the two last named companies, were also named as defendants.

The Ketchum concern originally secured, through the district court in Carbon county, possession of the strip alluded to, for its tramway. When it came to install a permanent tram line to transport its coal to the railroad the Ketchum company claimed that the defendant companies installed wire lines and other obstacles in the way. Again the Ketchum company appealed to the district court. Attorneys for the Utah Fuel and Pleasant Valley companies resisted the proceeding with a demurrer, and the case was finally carried to the supreme court.

The supreme court's decision overrules the demurrer in the Carbon county court and gives the defendant companies ten days in which to file answer to the application of the Ketchum concern for installation of its permanent tram. If no new issue of facts is presented by the defendant companies the supreme court directs the Carbon county court to enforce the order granting the Ketchum company right of way over that strip of land.

Ketchum, in the federal court at Salt Lake City, has also submitted a motion at some length to require Pleasant Valley Coal company to permit him to examine certain books, documents and papers relating to the coal lands in controversy at Castle Gate now pending in the court. The court took the matter under advisement with leave in five days to Ketchum to present a brief in support of his motion.

ATTAINS GREAT AGE

Grand Junction, Colo., Indian Nears Hundred and Twenty.

"Cherokee Bill" has just passed his hundred and nineteenth birthday, according to his own statement and to the government census records. In 1816 Cherokee Bill of this city, an old Indian who lives in a hovel on the bank of the Grand river on South Fifth street, was credited with being 112 years old, says the Grand Junction (Colo.) News of July 2d.

He was born in June of 1797 and has seen a part of three centuries. He is getting quite feeble and is not seen around as much as he used to be. He still lives on about nothing a day and expenses are not high for him. He says a real meal would be the treat of a lifetime and he hopes sometime to save up enough money to buy a beefsteak.

"Cherokee Bill" is quite a character and while some think that he has passed the age of mental competency and that his age is not authentic, he sticks to the age and date of his birth without forgetting it at any time. He says he remembers the war of 1812 and served in the Mexican war of 1845, being 21 years old at the time. He was a cook.

FRUITGROWING IN THE GREAT PLAINS

SUGGESTIONS AS TO TIME FOR PLANTING.

Lay of the Land Has Much to Do With Putting Out and Successful Cultivation of Trees—Department of Agriculture Bulletin That Contains Valuable Information in That Line.

The Sun Special Service.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 2.—Fruitgrowing in the great plains area is a home making rather than a money making enterprise. This region is not primarily a fruitgrowing country owing to lack of moisture in the soil, say specialists in the United States department of agriculture, but a few commercial orchards have been developed in favorable locations. In spite of adverse climatic conditions, such as damage from steady winds, hail and early frosts, considerable progress is also being made on numerous ranches in growing a supply of fruit for the home.

The tree fruits that occur most commonly in the dry land ranch orchards are apples, cherries and native plums, according to a new publication of the United States department of agriculture, Farmers' Bulletin No. 127. In some of the milder parts of the area, especially in the southern section, peaches, prunes and apricots are found. Currants and gooseberries are probably the most important of the small fruits. June berries, buffalo berries and strawberries are sometimes to be found.

Sites for planting fruit should be selected wherever possible with a view to conserving the supply of moisture in the soil. For instance, where a small stream passes through the ranch, a dam may be constructed and the water diverted to the orchard. Again, there are many instances where the lay of the land is such as to result in a large amount of runoff during heavy rains. If this runoff, which would otherwise be lost, can be collected in small contour ditches and distributed where fruits are planted, a considerable increase in the supply of moisture is secured.

Preparation For Planting.

The planting of fruits in this area should be done as a rule in the spring, and the soil so handled that it will contain as much moisture as possible at the time the planting is commenced. It is generally advisable to summer fallow during the season that precedes, and an adequate supply of soil moisture is still further insured if deep furrows are opened in the fall along the lines of the tree rows. These will serve to collect both the drifting snow and some of the runoff during heavy rains which might otherwise be lost. One very successful fruitgrower on a dry land ranch even supplemented the furrows by digging in the autumn rather large holes where the trees are to stand. Under ordinary climatic conditions this method of preparing the land should result in the trees starting into growth readily and making a good development of roots.

Those interested may secure the bulletin referred to by writing to the Division of Publications, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C. It is fully illustrated, contains much advice on planting and caring for fruit trees in the great plains area, and should be of help to those wishing to start an orchard.

COMPANY GETS FRANCHISE.

ROOSEVELT, July 1.—The city council has granted the Utah Telephone company a franchise, which will run for fifty years, to construct a central telephone and telegraph office here. The cost of the installation will aggregate about sixteen thousand dollars. When the new building is complete phone service can be had with outside towns without having to go through Vernal, as now, and much time and annoyance will be saved.

Advertising—The Place to Put It.

No merchant should neglect an opportunity to tell many good things about a stock which has good points, and no merchant can afford to have a stock about which he cannot honestly tell some good things.

Advertising to be worth while must say something worth saying and must get the attention of someone worth reaching as a customer. It isn't always possible to select the one to whom it is desired to sell goods, but it is necessary to get the interest of the many in the hope of reaching in the lot those who have wants which must be supplied and to supply them in a way which will bring them back a gain for similar things.

It isn't a cheap article that makes a good value, but a good thing that sells for a fair price makes the buyer feel that he got his money's worth and gives him a friendly feeling for the seller.

There are many people who will trade only in stores where the goods are advertised. No one ever heard of a person looking for a store which did not advertise. Therefore if many people are looking for the wideawake advertiser, and no one is discriminating against him, that in itself ought to be reason for the use of all the advertising a store can carry.
