Farmers Advertise

In looking over our exchanges we have noticed that in practically every part of the country the farmer is beginning to advertise in the newspapers. At this season of the year, in every country printing office, bills and posters advertising farm sales are printed. In some offices it is the custom to reprint the poster, or part of it, as an advertisement. We do not refer to that custom. The advertisements to which reference is made are especially written and set to go in two or three column space.

This means that the farmer is awakening to the value of newspaper advertising. He puts his announcement in the home paper, where he knows it will be seen by everyone interested in the forthcoming sale. He knows that it will be read carefully, for the paper is taken into every home and perused at leisure. He knows that he will get complete and perfect publicity and that it will be worth all the editor charges him. Other things being equal, the farmer who advertises his sale in the newspaper will have a larger buying crowd at his sale than if he had stuck up a few posters. The posters are all right in their way, but they should be supplemented with newspaper advertising.

In this respect, the farmer is pointing a way to the old fashioned merchant. The farmer buys advertised goods. Therefore he has come to realize the value of advertising.
