Told That There Was No Cure For Him

"After suffering for over twenty years with indigestion and having some of the best doctors here tell me there was no cure for me, I think it only right to tell you for the sake of other sufferers as well as your own satisfaction that a 25 cent bottle of Chamberlain's Tablets not only relieved me but cured me within two months although I am a man of 65 years," writes Jul. Grobier, Houston, Texas. For sale by all dealers.—Adv

WINTER CARE OF CELLARS.

Uniform Temperature and Good Ventilation Are Positive Requirements.

A uniform temperature of 45 degrees, perfect ventilation and good order are the three essentials for success with the cellar in winter. Uniform temperature and ventilation, of course, are positive requirements, for without either the real value of the cellar will be lost. Cellars are used primarily for storage purposes, and when the temperature rises above 60 degrees the root crops and fruit will shrivel and even start growth. Since potatoes are stored in the cellar and losses of potatoes are due to moisture and high temperature, it is necessary to maintain a temperature of 40 degrees or under.

The storage part of the cellar should be separated from the section containing the heating plant, so that little if any heat will pass through. This requires a strong, substantial wall, and the tighter it is built the better will be the insulation. Then there should be a ventilator which will admit air from the outside and which can be opened or closed at the will of the owner. As every cellar should have a good standard thermometer, the temperature can be watched and regulated. If the opening is on an unprotected place it can be covered with several thicknesses of burlap. This will prevent direct drafts of wind blowing into the cellar and prevent fluctuating temperatures. The farm home derives much good from a first rate cellar.
