Service to Our Customers

It has always been our policy to help customers save money, avoid waste and get complete satisfaction in the purchase of all kinds of building material. When they tell us their plans we tell them how to buy economically and what to use. When their plans are indefinite, we frequently make suggestions that suit the need.

PLANT BLACK WALNUT.

Very Desirable on the Farm Because of Lasting Qualities.

Because of the very high, lasting qualities of its wood and the moderately rapid rate of growth of the tree in good locations black walnut is one of the few most desirable trees to plant on the farm. Small patches of rough, gullied or unused land about the farm and narrow strips along fence rows and highways or corners of barnyards and stock lots make ideal places for planting the valuable tree. The method is simple, and the present heavy crop of nuts makes this year a most favorable time to begin work along this line. The region where walnut growing is practicable extends from southern New England west to the central states and south to South Carolina and along the northern portions of the gulf states to Oklahoma.

The black walnut tree is comparatively free from insect attack, particularly the wood. The price of black walnut lumber in recent years has been consistently high. Another factor to be considered is the rapidly diminishing supply of walnut trees over practically its entire range in the United States, due to recent cutting in order to meet the demand for gunstock material. The tree yields durable wood, which may be used for posts and for a wide variety of purposes about the farm in case it is not sold in the lumber market.

To plant the nuts make a small hole with a mattock or hoe, drop one or two nuts in each hole and cover them with about two inches of fresh, firmly packed soil. For the larger areas a good spacing in forest plantations is to dig the holes eight feet apart each way or 8 by 10 feet, which amounts to 680 and 545 holes per acre for the two spacings. For small areas or along fence rows and highways the spacing should be about eight feet in the row unless permanent shade is desired, in which case the distance should be twenty feet during the early period of growth and subsequently increased to forty feet by removing the alternate trees. For purposes of nut production the trees should be spaced at distances of from forty to sixty feet apart and should be given a due amount of cultivation. Requests for information along this line should be addressed to the bureau of plant industry of the department of agriculture at Washington. The number of nuts required can easily be found by knowing approximately their quality, the area of ground to be treated and the spacing. Care should be taken not to plant under shade. Where the trees in the old wood lot are to be cut during the next year or two and are moderately open planting may be done in the winter, so as to get a start in advance of the removal later of the overhead protection against early frosts and excessive drying of the soil in mid-summer.

While the best results are usually obtained by completely preparing the soil and cultivating it for a few years after planting, farm owners should be aware of the possibility of starting hundreds of young walnuts in their wood lots and elsewhere at the expense of only a little labor. This will be a good step in the process of securing useful and money making trees on parts of the farm which would perhaps otherwise be waste land, which is making no return at all to its owner.

AMATEUR CONTEST TONIGHT

This is the second Amateur Contest we have put on and we hope we will have more contestants than were on the previous Amateur night. We cannot assure our patrons of any certain number entering the contest, but there will be two of the local boy take part.

The management will do all in their power to make this entertainment one that you will enjoy, but do not blame us if there is no competition, we cannot help it.
