A man who was much bandy legged entered a local tailor's the other day and asked to be measured for a new suit. The assistant informed him the boss wasn't in.

"Never mind. 'Tha'll do as weel," answered the man, and the assistant began to measure him. When he had taken the measurements for the coat and vest he stood up, scratched his head and looked down at the man's legs.

"Wot arta looking at?" asked the man.
"Why, Aw'm lookin' at the legg. Aw've never measured onybody like thee afore."
"Oh, never mind my legg," said the man. "Thee measure um straight, ow lad. Aw'll bend um misel'."

Save Surplus Beans and Peas For Next Year's Seed

"Don't forget to save beans and peas out of your surplus for the planting next spring" is the advice which seed experts of the United States department of agriculture are sending to home gardeners and market gardeners throughout the country.

"Many market gardeners have beans or peas which they find it unprofitable to consume or to sell in the green state at the present time," declared a department expert. "They want to use the ground for later planting, and there is a temptation to plow under the whole crop. This, however, should not be done. It is better to save the crop, provided the stock is satisfactory, as it can be used for seed next year. Beans or peas in quantities beyond what is needed for seed can be used for food."

It is not difficult to handle and cure the vines and pods of both beans and peas. After the seed has reached full size and before the vines and pods are ripe and dry the vines should be cut with a scythe or sickle or pulled by hand. They can be cured by merely spreading on the ground until well wilted. After the beans and peas are dried they can be thrashed and the seed recovered.
