Akin to Love.

BY KENNETH F. HARRIS
(Copyright, 1902, by Daily Story Paper)
When Hepburn first saw the woman he was rather taken aback. A little later he decided that she was altogether to self-reliant and unsensitized for his taste. There was a man in the party who had achieved something in the world of art and was being lionized, a man to which he seemed to take a particular liking; a man who aroused a tolerable itching in the toes of other masculine person present. Hepburn noticed that Miss Pollard did not assume the attitude of attention in the presence of the artist. Perhaps the Genius noticed this for he left his little circle of admirers and seated himself on Miss Pollard's side. He honored her with some of his exclusive and original views of things, general and particular.

Hepburn happened to be close by and heard the conversation, which filled his soul with joy. "A steel trap is leisurely, even a story compared with her," he said, "evening to a select audience of admirers." "She had him in the first round, and dazed and reeling the ropes before the third. You never saw a girl with a quicker back, and he never really landed once."

"She must be all right," said Teddy Ackerman, "I think I'll reward her for that with a little of my society. I am interested."

"I wouldn't be," counseled Hepburn. "The Genius isn't exactly a fool even if he acts like an ass. As for you, you would simply be skinned alive if you began being pretty to her. I wouldn't want to try it myself, I know."

"Why?" asked Teddy. "Oh, well, I take it all back," said Hepburn. "I didn't mean to discuss the young lady. She is mighty clever and charming and handsome and—what do you say to a little game?" If Hepburn had continued with what was in his mind he would have said: "She is too self-poised, too independent, mentally and physically. A man could never assume an attitude of protection toward her. She rows and shoots better than four-fifths of the men here, and I couldn't have played the fish myself better than she did yesterday. Then she knows too much for a woman and hasn't any feminine foibles as far as I have noticed. There's not enough of the clinging vine about her. Not that I care a continental about her one way or the other."

Being in this indifferent frame of mind Hepburn for some days avoided Miss Pollard; then he concluded that his avoidance might perhaps seem marked, and after all, he had no reason to dislike the young lady. He was crossing the field to the tennis court with Teddy Ackerman when he made up his mind to this, and he had a vague idea that Teddy was babbling about something, but his eyes were fixed upon a figure in a white dress half reclining in the shade of a noble beech.

"Isn't she a queen?" exclaimed Teddy, enthusiastically. "Here's my chance now. Don't you spoil the sport, my son. You're due to play with Polly, and we'll watch you." He did not hear what Hepburn said, which was perhaps just as well, but strode off and flung himself on the grass at Margaret Pollard's side with a sigh of relief. At the same time Polly Ackerman waved her racket cordially at Hepburn and challenged him to a game.

Presently Teddy's tete-a-tete was broken up by the arrival of Jean Wilson and Maud Patterson and Maud soon after took him off to pump water from the spring in the ravine. The two girls left together, watched the players for some moments in silence. Then as Hepburn made a par-

Honored her with some of his exclusive and original views. "Wasn't that splendid?" she asked, turning a glowing face to Margaret. "And isn't he splendid?" she added. "Do you mean Mr. Hepburn?" asked Margaret, rather coldly. "He plays tennis well, if you like." "Of course he does. He does everything well. And he's so superbly handsome. I just adore him, don't you?" "I can hardly say I do. He isn't bad looking, though, and as you say, he does everything well, but—" "You don't like him, why?" "Doctor Fell," replied Margaret. "Perhaps I don't like perfection. Perhaps it's because he seems to know it. I suppose a woman likes a man mainly for his flaws and blemishes

—his weaknesses, if you like. She wants something to excuse—something to pity." "I wasn't thinking of him in quite that light," said Jean, artlessly; and Margaret's color deepened a little. "The worst of him is that he isn't interesting," she said indifferently. "Polly's a pretty girl, isn't she?" "How can you say that," persisted Jean. "He's so impenetrable and strong—like a rock of granite and—"

"Oh well," said Margaret impatiently. "I don't like that type of man, that's all." She was doomed (for her sins, she told herself) to see much of him in the next few days, and she experienced what he called the attraction of repulsion. He could talk well when he pleased and he exerted himself to talk his best when they were thrown together, but from any verbal encounter he invariably came away with a feeling that he had been worsted and he often chafed at the mocking tones of her voice and the half contemptuous look in the depths of her grey eyes. He was particularly conscious of that look one day at the beach. He was teaching Maud Patterson to swim and there was a good

"Margaret!" he cried. "deal of the vine about Maud. Margaret swam like a mermaid and Hepburn sensed that. He rather resented the way Teddy Ackerman was following her about, too, and the fact that she seemed rather to like that idiot's attentions did not increase his—well, his respect for her."

There came an evening at last, however, when his old feeling of warmth and affection for Ackerman revived. He had watched him strolling in the ravine path that ran below the house; just a glimpse here and there between the trees and he had noticed that the woman with him and to whom he was talking earnestly was—Margaret. It was not at that moment, when a strange pain shot through his breast and the blood swelled and throbbled at his temples, that the old feeling returned. It was when Teddy came striding back alone, his head upon his breast, his face white and drawn and his eyes blank and unseeing, that he felt kindly and pityingly.

"Teddy!" he said. "Oh, go to the devil," said Ackerman roughly, and walked on. For a moment Hepburn stood looking after him uncertainly, rage rising within him at the thought of the injury done to his friend by that cold, heartless, unwomanly—! Then came an impulse to confront her, to upbraid her, pour the vials of his wrath and contempt upon her. An unreasoning impulse of anger that sent him swiftly through the wood to where Margaret sat crouched in the fern beside the path, sobbing as if her heart would break, and at the sight of her and the sound of her weeping Hepburn's anger passed from him and the scales fell from his eyes.

"Margaret!" he cried. She started to her feet and her face hardened. She did not speak, but made an abrupt gesture of dismissal and turned from him. Her whole attitude was of aversion, but as he seized her hand and compelled her to look at him the tears were still in her eyes and upon her cheeks and it emboldened him. "No," he said, "I must tell you now what I would never have told you before, for I thought you less, or more, than woman and now I know you for what you are. I love you."

"Hard and unfeminine, as I am," she laughed scornfully. "I thought Miss Patterson was your ideal. Well, I am sorry that this happened, Mr. Hepburn. Good night!" "But not unkindly," he implored. "I know well enough that you could not care for me, yet I was weak enough to tell you." "You weak!" she exclaimed. "As weak as water in your hands, pitifully weak, miserably weak, and so pity me at least. You pitted—him, I know."

"Because of his weakness? No. And yet perhaps it was," she said, with eyes that softened as they looked on him kneeling at her feet. "But it is different with you, because—" "Yes, you are hard, and yet I love you," he cried, "and you are gentle and compassionate I know, for I love you and you must be. It is not different with me." She touched his hair, with an almost maternal caress. "It is," she whispered, bending to him, "for I do not love him."

The Boy Had Decided. The old gentleman was serious. "You should decide now what you will do," he wrote. "What line do you think you will take up?" In his reply the boy was equally serious. "The rush-line," he said.—Chicago Post.

GREATLY ALARMED

By a Persistent Cough but Permanently Cured by Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.
Mr. H. P. Burbage, a student at law in Greenville, S. C., has been troubled for four or five years with a continuous cough which he says "greatly alarmed me, causing me to fear that I was in the first stage of consumption." Mr. Burbage, having seen Chamberlain's Cough Remedy advertised, concluded to try it. Now read what he says of it: "I soon felt a remarkable change and after using two bottles of the twenty-five cent size, was permanently cured." Sold by all druggists.

Burland & Herndon pay the highest price for hides, pelts and furs. Inquire at Burland's Liqueur House. BAILEYHERNDON, Buyer

Too Great a Risk. In almost every neighborhood someone has died from an attack of colic or cholera morbus often before medicine could be procured or a physician could be summoned. A reliable remedy for these diseases should be kept at hand. The risk is too great for anyone to take. Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy has undoubtedly saved the lives of more people and relieved more pain and suffering than any other medicine in use. It can always be depended upon. For sale by all druggists.

Eggs for hatching from thoroughbred White Wyandottes also Gamecocks, for sale. Inquire at the Terms Furnishing Store.

A Little Early Riser. now and then, at bedtime will cure constipation, biliousness and liver troubles. DeWitt's Little Early Risers are the famous little pills that cure by arousing the secretions, moving the bowels gently, yet effectively, and giving such tone and strength to the glands of the stomach and liver that the cause of the trouble is removed entirely, and if their use is continued for a few days, there will be no return of the complaint. Sold by Watson & Moore.

We have for immediate acceptance—good income paying city property to exchange for farm property. Robbie & Hammond.

Baby Costs Too Much

When the price paid is the mother's health and happiness. The father doesn't realize as he romps with the child what years of wifely suffering must be set against the baby's laughter. Chronic invalidism is a high price to pay for the painful joy of maternity, yet it is at such a cost that many a woman becomes a mother. Such a price is too much because it is more than nature asks. By the use of Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription maternity is made practically painless, and a quick convalescence is assured in almost every case. "I am pleased to give my testimony and wish I could find words strong enough to induce other sufferers to use Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription." writes Mrs. Wesley Gay, of Kempsville, Ont., Box 6. "For eight years after my little boy was born I suffered with female weakness, also soreness in ovaries, especially on my right side, and pain in back. Was so miserable sometimes did not know what I was going to do. Tried several doctors but derived no benefit until I began using Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. Had only used four bottles, also some of Dr. Pierce's Anodyne and Healing Suppositories, when I felt like another person. I recommend Dr. Pierce's medicines to all my friends. If anyone wishes to write me I will gladly answer."

Years

Of Suffering From Heart Disease. I Would Not be Alive Today But For Dr. Miles' Heart Cure.

Do not neglect the warning symptoms of a weak heart. Palpitation, smothering spells, swelling of feet or ankles, pain in and around heart, dizziness, faintness of the stomach, lungs, liver, bladder, kidneys, etc., arise from heart weakness. A weak heart must be helped. It cannot stop to rest. It must be strengthened and regulated. The blood must be enriched, the heart nerves strengthened and the circulation improved by the great heart and blood tonic, Dr. Miles' Heart Cure. There is positively nothing to equal this wonderful medicine in its beneficial influence upon hearts weakened from any cause. "I am very grateful for what Dr. Miles' Heart Cure has done for me, as I am confident I would not be alive today had I not learned of its wonderful virtues and taken it before it was too late. I had been a sufferer from valvular heart disease for many years, in fact ever since I was a little girl, and for three years before I began using Heart Cure I was in very bad shape. I could not sleep on my left side at all and would frequently have the most dreadful smothering spells. At times my left side would swell up. I had pain in my head all the time from which I suffered greatly. Nothing I took had me any good until I used eleven bottles of Dr. Miles' Heart Cure which removed all these distressing symptoms and made me feel well and strong."—Mrs. H. C. CRUSE, San Francisco, Cal. All druggists sell and guarantee first bottles of Miles' Remedy. Send for free book listing and expenses of sale. A. D. Nelson, Secretary.
