Yes, hang him, of course! He deserves to rise. Where his heels may dangle o'er Haman's head. At least we shall have one scoundrel less. Conveniently crased in his headlessness. To walk our streets in an innocent guise. With his hidden pistol and stealthy tread.

But when we have hanged him, what comes then? Had he any confederates? Let us see! For the law is imperfect and lame at best. And a confederate's weight should be made to rest on as many as possible, women or men. Who've assisted in breaking its just decree.

When a youth the Ephesian temple fired, That his name, as he said, might live thro' time, 'Twas decreed that it never be written or spoken— A law by the chroniclers quickly broken, Who've given him all that he desired. And offered his chosen reward for crime.

Thus you, the historians, are to blame. You offered this fellow a heavy tribe: If he'd only compass a shameful deed, A sickening sorrow to all who read, You'd give him something as good as fame, To any one of his valiant tribe.

Then you, the reporters, hungry for news, And setting at naught the law for printed press, You've doled us to death with his nauseous name. With how he looks and whence he came, And what he drinks, and how he graws, Till the idiot reader thinks him great.

And we who have read are guilty beside; To be curious hold we a sacred right; As we smother a fainting man in the street, Or run to evil with hurrying feet, Making a crowd where the felons may hide, And balking justice to gratify sight.

The quack who has striven the law to impede, The garrulous parson to decency blind, Every fool who has asked for his autograph, Or greeted his jests with a huzial laugh, Is an accessory after the deed. And before the next we shall have of his kind.

When a few more years bring another such blow, And the head of the nation lies in state, While our door-posts are darkened, our songs are stifled, While our streets with the ensigns of mourning are filled, While we follow the funeral, sad and slow, We shall think of these things, God help us! too late. —Rosster Johnson.

HERE AND THERE.

Complaint is made that the German universities are overcrowded. During the season of financial speculation that followed the French war the attendance seriously fell off. But now students are coming in larger numbers than ever, with the result, it is said, of injuring productive industries and depreciating the standard of examinations.

A young man of wealthy London parentage came to America to see the Centennial Exhibition of 1876. Although provided abundantly with money by his father, he lived so riotously that he wanted more, and to get it he went into a scheme of forgery. His trial and conviction did not bring out his real name, and, on going to the Moyamensing prison for five years, he wrote home that he had started on a slow tour around the world, and so might not be heard of in a long time. His recent death divulged the facts.

One of the most eminent of German medical men is reported as saying that there are not less, probably, than 10,000 persons in Germany who have become slaves to the habit of hypodermically injecting morphine. There are many who take as much as eighteen injections every day. Some have hardly a square inch of skin on their bodies which is not marked by scars produced by this practice. Slaves of this habit are even more hopelessly enchained than those who take opium in other ways, and it is speedier destruction.

In the new number of the Revue des Deux Mondes M. Charles Richet gives some startling statistics as to the state of population in France since 1826, more especially since 1876. The number of births is diminishing over the whole of France, though not equally in all the provinces. The diminution of births is greater in the rural population and greatest where the land is most subdivided among peasant proprietors. During the last fifty years the population of the three great towns, Paris, Lyons, and Marseilles, alone show no increase.

It is perhaps not generally known that Weber's "Euryanthe" is, in the principles of its construction, the direct predecessor of Wagner's music dramas. In a letter written on December 20, 1824, to the Akademische Musikverein of Breslau, Weber says that the work would be ineffective in the concert room, because it is "a purely dramatic experiment, relying for its effect only on combined working together of all the sister arts." Wagner, however, carries the principles much further than Weber, for in "Euryanthe" the usual musical forms are retained, though the numbers in most cases follow one another without a break.

Some progress is being made with the works for the Panama canal. Excavations have been begun at several places; but much sickness and mortality prevail among the laborers who are to a large extent drawn from the West Indies—especially from Jamaica. The French have built hospitals, for which there seems to be only too much need. The total absence of all proper sanitary arrangements is said to be a far greater cause of disease than the unhealthiness of the climate, although during eight or nine months of the year the heat is intense. The Europeans on the isthmus have experienced great suffering; but their respective Governments, acting through the resident Consuls, have been prompt to relieve all urgent cases of distress.

The recent favorable notice of the remarkable Scotch peasant author, Janet Hamilton, by Mr. John Bright, in his speech in Birmingham, has awakened so much interest in her that a selected volume of her works has just been published in Glasgow. The wonderful point of the matter is that Janet Hamilton never had any education except what she derived from books—chiefly Shakespeare, whose works she knew almost by heart—and that, never having had a lesson in grammar, she wrote essays in English absolutely faultless. The estimation in which she was held in her native land is shown by the fact that the unveiling of her monument, in 1880, was witnessed by an assemblage of 60,000 people.

A Hartford man, who was broken down in health, but had plenty of money, settled in Southern California. He is now the owner of two splendid farms, one of 600 acres and the other of 3,000, and his health is in perfect condition. In his orchards there are 26 varieties of apple trees, 37 varieties of grapes, 1,000 pear trees embracing 15 varieties, 17 varieties peaches, 350 olive trees, 350 Japanese persimmons, 10 acres of English walnuts, besides pecan and filbert trees. He has also 47 varieties of roses and 17 magnolia trees. He would plant his whole land in grapes for raisins and table use if he could get him to pick them when ripe. Farm laborers are in great demand here. He thinks there is no place like Southern California.

How steadily German influence is increasing in Constantinople may be inferred from the announcement recently published in the Berlin Official Gazette, that the Emperor William has transferred four officers of the Prussian regular army to the Ottoman military service. Colonel Kachler, commanding the Sixth Silesian Hussars, Captain Kampfhoeven of the Third Hanoverian Infantry, Captain von Hohe of the First Silesian Dragoons, and Captain Ristow of the Second Pomeranian Field Artillery Regiment, have been ordered to place themselves at the disposal of the Sultan, who desires to employ them in reorganizing the different branches of his land forces.

Wagner has snubbed the Parisians. He has written a letter to the Renaissance Musicale announcing that he will not permit "Lohengrin" to be performed in Paris, first, because "Lohengrin" has gone round the world and can dispense with the honor, and next because it is impossible to represent it in the French, and Parisians would not care to hear it in German. "My works," he writes, "are essentially German, and those who care to hear them should hear them in the original." We cannot blame Wagner very much when we remember that Victor Hugo has repeatedly expressed contempt for everything German, and that Sarah Bernhardt refused to act in Berlin.

A rancorous feud has existed between the East India peoples, the Khonds and the Kultas, for a considerable time. This culminated a few months ago in an outbreak at Kala-hundi, when 142 Kulta villages were looted by the Khonds. Matters were then apparently settled on a satisfactory basis. The feud has, however, now broken out again in a more exaggerated form. The Khonds have risen in a body, and have sworn to massacre every Kulta man, woman and child in the Kala-hundi State. At Bhowanapatna, the capital of Kala-hundi, upward of 400 Kultas have been murdered and the Treasury looted. Portions of the hair and flesh of murdered people have been distributed among the Hill Khonds, and an endeavor has been made to excite them to join in an attack upon the Kultas. This bitter feeling of animosity on the part of the Khonds is due to the fact that while they are the indigenous population, and the natural proprietors of the soil, they have been gradually ousted out of possession in certain villages by the Kultas, who came among them originally merely as settlers. The Khonds number altogether about 200,000.
