Improving the road up Agency creek and over the hill into Montana. Once this road is put in shape for auto travel it will probably be the main road traveled into the valley and will attract many Montana tourists as well as buyers this way. Our gardeners will find a ready market for all their produce in Horse Prairie and in Dillon and Armstead. Dealers in those places have to ship in all their fruits and more tender vegetables and would be glad to get them fresh. Trucks could haul back freight and thus load both ways. Our freight rates would be reduced if there was a little more competition. Let's all boost together for this road.

Western Literary Magazine.

The Lariat of Portland, Oregon, makes its bow as a literary monthly, the only publication of its kind west of New York, devoted exclusively to discussion and criticism of literary matters. Western writers will find it of great interest as voicing western standards of expression, when it is considered that the West has never produced a writer of the degenerate school, but all western fiction, poetry and dramas are clean and wholesome, from the days of the pioneers in literature down to the present. The first number is for January, 1923, and has just been published. It is on fine paper and carries no advertisements of trashy books.
