THE WHEELER EXPEDITION

Several detachments of Lieut. Wheeler's survey are now encamped on Treadway's Ranch. The work begun last year in this section of country will be carried on during the current season. There will be four parties in Nevada and California, the largest of which will be large, and the others small. The first party is commanded by T. W. Symons. He will survey the region lying north of Carson as far as Southern Oregon...

The second was a girl, who did not remember her name; her companions said it was Dummie. Next was a boy named Ambrose Miriam Tagit, who said he had two brothers older than himself and one younger brother. His father, mother and elder brothers were killed; his younger brother was brought to Cedar City. He said he lived in Johnson county, but did not know the State, and said it took one week to go from where he lived to his grandfather's and grandmother's, who were still living in the States.

The fourth was a girl obtained by Dr. Forney from John Morris, a Mormon at Cedar City. She was too young to recollect anything about herself. The fifth was a boy who could not tell his own name, but said the girl obtained from Morris was named Mary, and was his sister. This little boy had been living since the massacre with one E. H. Grove.

A girl, who said her name was Prudence Angeline, was the sixth. She had two brothers, Jesse and John, who were killed. She said her father's name was William and that she had an uncle named Jesse. Seventh was a very little girl, who gave her name as Francis Harris or Horne; she remembered nothing of her family. The eighth was a boy too young to remember anything about himself.

The ninth was a boy who said his name was William W. Huff. The tenth was a boy who gave his name as Charles Thatcher. The eleventh was a girl; her name she gave as Sophronia Huff. The twelfth was a little girl who called herself Betsey.

The thirteenth, fourteenth and fifteenth were three sisters, named Rebecca, Louisa and Sarah Dunlap. These had been staying with Jacob Hamlin. There is no description and no name given to the sixteenth. The seventeenth was a boy, who was only six weeks old at the time of the massacre. Hamlin's wife took this little fellow to the camp of the First United States dragoons, commanded by Brevet Major James H. Carleton, at Mountain Meadows, May 19, 1859. He was the last child recovered, and was then about a year and a half old.

Dr. Forney, who was Superintendent of Indian Affairs in Utah Territory, took the seventeen fatherless, motherless and penniless children from Salt Lake across the plains to Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, where he was met by two young men and two young ladies, who took all of the children away immediately to Missouri and Arkansas, with the exception of one, a boy, who was met by his uncle from Arkansas at Fort Leavenworth.

THE CHILDREN WHO WERE SPARED.

The history of the child survivors of the Mountain Meadow Massacre is contained in some official documents recently transmitted from the War Department to Salt Lake City. The survivors it seems number seventeen, but sixteen only are here accounted for—six boys and ten girls. The first was a boy named Calvin, between seven and eight years old. He did not remember his surname, but said he was near his mother when she was shot, and pulled the arrows out of her back until she died. He said he had two brothers older than himself, named Henry and James, and three sisters—Nancy, Mary and Martha—all slain.

Next was a boy named Ambrose Miriam Tagit, who said he had two brothers older than himself and one younger brother. His father, mother and elder brothers were killed; his younger brother was brought to Cedar City. GENERAL JACKSON MADE HIM PAY.

The keeper of a boarding-house here, when Andrew Jackson was President, waited on him one day and complained that a Tennesseean, who had been appointed by him to a clerkship in one of the Departments would not pay a board bill. "Get his note," said old Hickory. "For the full amount, interest included, payable in sixty days, and bring it to me." "That will be of no use," replied the boarding-house keeper, "for he never pays his notes." "Do as I tell you, sir," said Jackson, as he turned away.

The next day the boarding-house keeper reappeared at the White House and handed the note to the President. He took it, read it, wrote 'Andrew Jackson' across the back in his well-known autograph, and handed it back, saying, "Take that to the Bank of the Metropolis, and tell them from me that at maturity it will be paid by either the drawer or the endorser. They will discount it for you."

A few days afterward the man who had given the note met his creditor and tauntingly said: "Well, I don't suppose you have been able to negotiate my paper?" "Yes," replied the boarding-house keeper, "I had no trouble in getting it discounted at legal rates of interest." "Who in thunder is willing to discount my notes?" asked the Tennesseean. "The Bank of the Metropolis discounted the one you gave me, upon the assurance that if you did not pay it the endorser would." "But who would endorse my note?" "General Jackson, and he sent word to the bank that if you did not pay the note he would." It is hardly necessary to add that the note was promptly paid by the maker.—(Hartford Courant.)

Little Willie having hunted in all the corners for his shoes, at last appears to give them up, and climbing on a chair, betakes himself to a big book on the side table. Mother says to him, "What is that doing with the book?" "It is the dictionary; papa looks in the dictionary for things, and I am looking to see if I can find my shoes."

A woman is an intricate conundrum.

THE GRANDPA.

The grandpas is an individual, aged somewhere between fifty and one hundred years, and is a common occurrence in most well regulated families.

Next to a healthy mother-in-law, they have more business on hand than any other party in the household. They are the standing authority on all leading topics, and what they don't know about things that happened sixty-five years ago, or what will happen for the next three years to come, is a damage for everybody to know.

Grandpas are not entirely useless; they are handy to hold babies, and feed pigs, and are very smart at mending a broken broom-handle or putting up the clothes-line on washing days.

I have seen grandpas that churn good, but I consider it a mighty mean trick to set an old man over eighty years to churning butter.

I am a grandpa myself, but I won't churn for no concern, not if I understand myself.

I am willing to rock the baby while wimmen folks are billing soap; I am ready to kut rags to work into rag-carpets; they can keep me hunting hens' eggs, or picking green kurrants, or I will even dip kandles or korn apples for sass, but I won't churn.

I have examined myself on this subject, and will bet a jackknife Josh Billings won't churn.

Grandpas are poor help at bringing up children; they are all full of precept and catechism, but the young ones all seem to understand that grandpa minds them a heap more than they mind grandpa.—(Josh Billings.)

The San Francisco Post of May 29 relates this amusing story: The spectacle of eight woolly-haired, dark-skinned East Indians, with eyes glaring and finger-nails and toe-nails seeking for something to dig into as their owners tumbled like tar-barrels down the staircase of the Russian Consul's office, was as interesting yesterday as that official himself, standing in irate dignity at the head of the staircase, swelling with triumph at the vindication of the czar of all the Russias. Whether it was a joke or not remains to be seen, but from the account which they gave to the Post this morning, anxious that the majesty of the press should avenge the insult to their persons, it appears that, inspired by a desire to fight Russia, they went to the Turkish Consul to see about getting sent home to Turkey to join the army. Perhaps misled by their statements, in language only a trifle more intelligible than that of the baboons on their native heaths, he gave them a note to the Russian Consul.

"What do you want?" said the latter, as the delegation of Bash-Bazonks invaded his sanctum. "Go home—Turkey—eight Turkey—light Russia—dam Russia!" said the spokesman, with classic English and dramatic fervor. "Which?" said the startled official as his patriotic beard bristled at the insult. "Yah! yah! yah! yah! dam Russia!" chorused the eight. The war began immediately. The spokesman started down the stairway head first, the frightened followers going after, the official boot playing a lively tune on the most vulnerable portion of the Turkish recruits, and when the sidewalk had been reached and a council of war held the gang started off, first for the newspaper office, to inform the world of the outrage, and afterward for such other vengeance as was most feasible.

"Do you very much like to have me kiss you, George?" she said softly, stooping over him and leaving the monogram of her lips on his brow. "I do, indeed, dear," he said. "I just shut my eyes, and try to think that I feel the touch of one who was dear to me in the days long gone by—before you and I was married." He had hardly finished the remark before he exclaimed, "O, don't! don't do that" as a large copy of the New Testament hit him suddenly three or four times on the spot where he had been kissed.

The first thing a young man does on seeing a friend with a new hat on is to take it off and serenely try it on his own head. When a young lady sees an acquaintance with a new bonnet on, she just lifts her nose and serenely wonders "where the thing got that fright."—(Catskill Recorder.)
