

AN ALMANAC, 1888.—A double-headed man stands before a banquet taking the covers off the meats, to represent January; it was the season for the table and good cheer. A man on a stool represents February; he has taken off one shoe and holds the unshod foot and both his hands close to a blazing fire. It is "eyll wader" out of doors, and shelter is acceptable. A girl represents March. She is in a garden that has palings round it, with here and there a timber alcove, and she is hoeing. It is time to prepare the ground. In April, a man plows, his plow drawn by two horses. In May, a girl, seated, takes a bath in a tub in a garden, holding a small tree bough in her hand. In June, a man chops wood, his ax swung far and high behind him with strong muscle. It is time to thin the forests, foliage being thick. In July, a man has his scythe out cutting grass, flowers shooting up among it freely. In August, a girl uses a sickle Norman-like, only cutting straight-up close-grown corn. In September, a man is gathering grapes, a wine press near. In October, a man is upon a ladder gathering apples from the tree, a full sack erect upon the ground, a basket for the immediate gathering hanging on a branch. In November, a man chops again, great lying tree trunks this time, the living trees of background quite bare. It is time to think of shelter, timber being universal for it, (mainly) timber being abundant, and needing the seasoning which winter will give time for. In December, a man is ready to have his hatchet down upon an animal's throat, a lad holding the poor brute's head back to receive the blow.—[All the Year Round.]

The Chinamen who are working on Gold Canyon use blankets in their sluices and d rockers in order to save the very fine gold which predominates and which forms the bulk of their gatherings. Much of this gold is almost as fine as flour. It is found from the surface down; indeed it can be seen on the surface of the ground where the wind has blown the dust away.
