MAN MEN.

(New York Times.)

It is shown almost daily by unimpeachable testimony that husbands and fathers, assuming to be reputable, and frequently held to be so until detected to be base counterfeiters, have for years done nothing toward the subsistence of wife and children. In many cases they have not even looked after themselves, but have meanly eaten the bread—and yet it did not choke them—earned by the woman that have solemnly promised to love, honor and protect. The popular opinion that woman is a dependent creature, that she cannot make her own way in the world, that she needs to be guarded, hedged round, cared for by noble man, is pitably controverted on every side of each city, town and village in the country. It would be supremely mortifying to us all if we should know how large a proportion of poor women furnish food, shelter and clothing for their husbands and the offspring these have begotten. The actual figures, could they be gathered, would put all manhood to shame and expose a widespread error. It has always been the boast of the Americans particularly that their men are manly, that they respect and revere their women, that they stand between them and the battle of life, that they will not let their woman drudge and toil, as so many foreigners do, when they have the health and strength to save them, and a great mass make good their boast. Still it must be conceded that there are millions of men who do nothing but drink and gamble, leaving their wives and children to suffer. The first duty of every man, whether civilized or uncivilized, whatever his breed or creed, to provide for her he pretends to love and for those who are the product of his love is ignominiously neglected, though seldom openly known. Divorce suits unveil but a portion of them. There are fathers innumerable who support their married daughters and their children, because their husbands make no effort to do so. There are brothers that feel called upon to help their sisters' and their brothers' families, because unnatural husbands and fathers are too lazy, too unprincipled, too contemptible to take care of their own. The sacrifices that women suffer in this world are more pathetic and magnanimous than most of us could be led to believe without detailed facts and the unroofing of countless homes. What meanness, what injustice, is perpetually practiced in the name of wife and children! Men fawn, and beg, and lie, and swindle and seek to excuse deceit and dishonor for their assumed behalf, while they are really degrading themselves for purely selfish ends. Hundreds of undeserving husbands and fathers say that they cannot do what they would for their own. A man who will not provide for his wife and children has no right to have them. He is not a man but something in man-shape, lower than the most ignorant brute.

"THE OLD BROWN BULL."—William Borthwick, "Superintendent" of the Old Brown Bull, left for Taylor District this morning for the purpose of resuming work on the mining claim that bears the above euphonious name. Its fame is not yet very widely spread, but locally has its full share. There has been considerable blowing about the claim in a jocular way but not without something to build upon. The vein is over 19 feet wide, has a well-defined hanging wall, but the foot-wall is yet to be found. The ore assays all the way from $90 to $100. When the last assessment work was done one of the higher grades predominated. Who knows but the way the claim got its name will sometime be read with interest. This is no "hulling" notice, for the claim is not for sale for anything less than $100,000. Any one wishing to take it at that figure must commence talking immediately, if not sooner, for it might be developed out of his reach in a month. The owners, Wm. Borthwick, Wm. Pryde, Thos. Callahan and the modest and retiring Belter man, don't wish to be bothered with bank accounts less than $25,000. The printing business is becoming irksome.—(Ward Relief.)

"Let our lives," says Miss Swatching, "be pure as snow-balls, when our foot-prints leave a mark, but not a stain."

PERKINS' PRIZE.

George W. Perkins died at New York city last week aged 39 years, leaving a fortune of $3,000,000. He was a banker, or rather a railroad speculator, and railroaded himself into the grave by overwork. If Mr. Perkins had been content with a moderate amount of money he would be alive to-day, well and doing well, but he played for big stakes and his "jack pot" was a coffin after all. We would rather have the appetite, the good digestion and keen enjoyment of life of a barefooted boy that gambols in the gutter than Mr. Perkins' money. Health is wealth to a wise man, and no wise man ever yet gambled away fine health for more wealth than he could sensibly use. To place his family beyond want, to pay his debts, a man can afford to strain his health to the point of ruin, but beyond this point to barter comfort for millions, happiness for power, is but picking Dead Sea apples; you have your prize and yet you are miserable because you have won it. There is no more morality in wasting health to win inordinate wealth than there is in wasting health in trying to "corner" the consumption of whisky, champagne, lobster salad, turtle, fried oysters or fast women. The game is not worth the candle, and Mr. Perkins is dead at 39, no better off here or hereafter, than if he had died with a moderate estate, with this difference, that he would probably have lived about thirty years longer and seen his children and perhaps his grandchildren grow up around him. We don't think Perkins drew a prize in his three millions with a coffin attached. The capacity to earn three meals a day from the cradle to the grave, and digest the same, is altogether larger wealth in this life than burning your candle at both ends to make a million, and then dying like Moses, just as you come in sight of the "Promised Land," with the difference that Moses was full of years and honors, while Perkins was only 39. Why, there isn't an able-bodied, honest, healthy, quarryman, or mechanic, or railroad employee who eats heartily, sleeps well and is full of animal spirits, that envies Perkins his prize of three millions at 39 years of age, with a silver handled coffin attached. The zest and relish of life that even a poor man, who is healthy, takes from the cradle to 70 years of age, is worth more to a man than three millions and a coffin at 39. We think Perkins' prize was really a blank; of course, if we were his principle heir we might view Perkins as a hero and a martyr for our sake, and hold him up as a model to the young men of America, but as it is it looks very much as if Perkins had made his "pile" only to lose it. A man with a bag of gold in a trackless desert without water or trees or game is a rich man in one sense, and yet really he is very poor. Just so with a man who wins his wealth prematurely, and wastes his health and happiness in scooping his prize. Like Moses he struggles to the top of his financial Nebo and dies "with all his music in him" at 39. Hasten slowly is good advice; the joy of living is worth a good deal to a decent nature, and it never pays to sell the glory of health for the halo of wealth, that is as transient as the aurora borealis as soon as health begins to fade. When deadly sickness comes the peasant is not much worse off than the prince, and in the long run good health is substantial wealth, for it can at least enjoy all it wins, while the sick Midas has to live on prison fare to keep the breath of life briefly in his broken body. Let us not gamble for Perkins' prize; let us go slow and remember that health is wealth.

No hyperbole of contempt or scorn could be launched against John Randolph but he would overtop it with something more scornful and contemptuous. Opposition only maddened him into brilliant bitterness. "Isn't it a shame, Mr. President," he said one day in the Senate, "that the noble buildings of the administration should be wasting their precious time in worrying the rats of the opposition?" Immediately the Senate was in an uproar, and he was clamorously called to order. The presiding officer, however, sustained him, and pointing his long, skinny fingers at his opponents, Randolph screamed out: "Rats, did I say? Mice! Mice!"

It is gravely affirmed in floating paragraphs that a person in Troy, having had to use a telephone a great deal during eighteen months, found to his dismay that his left ear, which he constantly applied to that instrument, had grown to three times the size of his right ear, and that it still continued growing.
