Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

Miss C. G. McClave, School teacher, 753 Park Place, Elmira, N. Y. "This Spring while away from home teaching my term in a country school I was perfectly wretched with that human agony called dyspepsia. After dieting for two weeks and getting no better, a friend wrote me, suggesting that I take August Flower. The very next day I purchased a bottle. I am delighted to say that August Flower helped me so that I have quite recovered from my indisposition."

A GRAMERCY PARK THANKSGIVING

It was the night before Thanksgiving, the city was ablaze with light. The first snow had fallen and the air itself seemed light-hearted.

The massive mansions all surrounded Gramercy park were brightly lighted. In muffled silence a young man, cloakless and gloveless, hurried by the iron bars that fence in the little square of the rich toward his lodging place.

For five years Jack Fleming had lived alone. No one knew very much about him, except that he was a thrifty, indolent genius. When his father died the fortune that might have gone to him had endowed certain wealthy charitable institutions.

Another great tramping place for the little people was Gramercy park, for both houses faced the handsome playground and Mr. Goldthwait and Jack's father were among the favored rich who possessed keys to the great iron gates that shut out the children of the poor, who often lined the iron fence and peered wistfully within.

Jack was 15 and Dora 13. Then Jack went to college, but every holiday found him at home again, and often books went by the board and Jack came home to his father and mother.

After three years of college Jack was hopelessly behind in his studies, and his father, still ignorant of the reason, called him a blockhead. One day Jack received a letter, a loving letter from Dora asking him to come home at once, as her father had just received word from England that he had fallen heir to a large property.

Jack entered, "So you have been wasting your time next door instead of studying."

No pleading on the part of Jack could induce the turbulent old man to relax his attitude. He had no doubts as to the wisdom of his decision.

"On your reason!" he shouted as Jack entered. "So you have been wasting your time next door instead of studying."

He found it a harder struggle than he expected. His income fluctuated from month to month. He became first a wanderer among apartments, then among boarding houses, and at last an inhabitant of "furnished rooms," who ate at cheap restaurants when he could eat at all.

but he determined to breakfast in spite of the almost total emptiness of his pocket-book. He turned his face toward the lower portion of the city, offered itself, but it was a holiday, and several hours spent in tramping the quiet streets Jack turned back toward his lodging place.

When the family restaurant came into sight Jack's thoughts were in his eyes of the many times he and Dora had laughed in the great dining room. As he reined up before it, he haggard and besattered, totally different from his old self, he started with amazement.

For a moment Jack could hardly restrain himself from rushing forward and declaring his identity. But a thought of his father and his work made him stop. He came as anxious to hide his face as he had been a moment before to tell his name.

It was dark before he went back to his little room and stationed himself once more at his window to gaze at the lights in the Goldthwait mansion. He was filled with a conflict of love and pride. He had no reason to believe that Dora had not forgotten him, but his love for her was as strong as ever.

The windows of the great old dining room were bright with light and their raised curtains revealed to him a clear view of the place where he and Dora had spent many happy Thanksgiving reunions together. He saw her sitting at the table with her feet tucked up, and her hands busy with the finishing touches on the arrangement of fruits and flowers.

He could see her plainly. She looked even younger and more beautiful than she had that afternoon in her heavy street wraps.

Half an hour passed and some one else came into the room—a tall handsome man. Dora seemed to forget her duties, for she turned to look at the man's arm, and seemed to smile with him. At last he sat down, and then still another person came in; it was Mr. Goldthwait. They sat by the literary work and trying to get some one to produce his plays. "I finally got a track of him, this morning, and this morning also I saw the manuscript of this play lying on the table where you had left it when you brought it up from the theater.

The words "John Fleming" caught my attention at once, and I picked it up and read it. It seemed to me so strange that I made up my mind that you shouldn't send it back without reading it, so I read it to you myself. And now I shall send for Jack tomorrow and when he comes I shall have good news for him. And—good news for Jack is—good news for me, for you see. So I am very happy."

There was a noise of an opening window, and Jack, wild-eyed and unkempt, but very joyful, stepped in. For a moment they did not recognize him, but when they did—

"Yes," added Mr. Goldthwait, "it is doubly good because it will be followed by a real Thanksgiving dinner."

THE UBIQUITOUS LAMP. Its Use in the House Is Based on Artistic Principles. Art, as well as the fashion, demands that artificial light shall not be glaring, and many are the devices resorted to in order to give proper effect and tone to a light that would otherwise spoil the whole aspect of a room.

One reason why lamps are so much in favor now, in place of gas, is on account of their adaptability to the various methods of subduing and diversifying the light; and they truly deserve the popularity they hold. Almost from time immemorial lamps have had a high artistic value, and there is no one article more frequently seen in collections of antique art pieces than the various lamps of clay, porcelain, bronze and other metals.

In the ruins of Herculaneum and Pompeii lamps of every size and all kinds have been found, from the tiny night lamp to the high and elaborate floor lamps, not unlike those we now call piano lamps, says Demorest's Magazine.

But never before in the history of lamps have they received such attention or been subject to such elaborate decoration as they are today. The shade has become an essential part of the lamp, and one would no more think of setting up a handsome lamp of any kind without some shade to soften its light than one would think of having a cabinet without any bric-a-brac.

The Withered Tree of Calcutta. That awful Indian bugaboo, the "withered tree of Calcutta," stands on the Stanley road, a few miles out from Calcutta, India. It is not a botanical freak of the "cannibal" or "bloodsucker" variety, neither is it a tree which exhales poisonous vapors or other deadly elements—it is simply a species of churrah which grows in the hills and is common to English residents believe to be bewitched. Away back in the sixteenth century Seraga Dowah, a twenty-two of his men camped under it about 2 o'clock one morning, and at daylight all but two were dead.

One of the survivors remained a chattering idiot all the rest of the days of his life, and the other died a horrible death within the month of a terrible eruption that swelled his body out of all proportions. In the seventeenth century the tree claimed a score or more of victims. The last victim was a servant of Mr. Kemp, of the British department. He took refuge under the cursed tree to escape a storm. A savior, or mounted policeman, tried to rescue the servant, but the two men and horse were found dead next day. Since 1869 five persons have been struck by lightning within 100 feet of the "withered tree."

Paper Pulp. Paper can be manufactured out of almost anything that can be pounded into pulp. Over fifty kinds of bark are said to be used, and banana skins, bean stalks, pine vines, coconut fiber, clover and timothy hay, straw, and fresh water weeds, and many kinds of grass are all applicable. It has also been made from hair, fur and wool, from asbestos, which furnishes an article indigestible by fire; from hop plants, from husks of any and every kind of grain. Leaves make a good strong paper, while the husks and stems of Indian corn have also been tried, and almost every kind of moss can be made into paper. There are patents for making paper from sawdust and shavings, from thistles and thistle down, from tobacco stalks and tanbark. It is said that there are over two thousand patents in this country covering the manufacture of paper.

London's Great Tower. A tower designed to attain a height of 150 feet greater than that of the celebrated Eiffel tower of Paris is in course of construction at Wembley park, near London. The foundation work has been completed, and the superstructure has attained a height of sixty-two feet. The tower is erected under the auspices of Sir Edward Watkin. The plan of the tower was the result of an advertisement three years ago, in which architects were invited to send in designs in competition for substantial prizes.

Tall Englishmen. The English professional classes are the tallest of adult males, attaining the average height of five feet nine and one-fourth inches. Taken right through, the English and American races are approximately of the same height. Most European nations average, for the adult male, five feet six inches; but the Austrians, Spaniards and Portuguese just fall short of this standard.

The Exact Length of the Day. The day is usually reckoned as being twenty-four hours in length; strictly speaking, such is a mistake. The standard unit of time is the sidereal day, which is twenty-three hours fifty-five minutes and 4.092 seconds in "solar" mean time.

A True Christian. Mabel—What makes you think you are a Christian? Blanche—Well, last night when Fred smacked me on one cheek I turned to my other.

Parson Reed's Response. The Rev. Myron Reed's queer remark to our jovial old-headed friend Jim Woodward (Jayhawker) is worth preserving. The eloquent di- friend had just arrived in Indianapolis to take charge of the first Presbyterian church, and was talking a little party of gentlemen, when the irrepressible Jayhawker gleefully joined in, and not particularly noticing the introduction made, he took the floor by "Sentorial courtesy," and promptly proceeded to divest himself of a favorite story of his, not loud, but deep. He was quick enough to observe that it fell lamentably short, and instinctively realizing that some disturbing element was present, he turned to the only stranger, and ventured: "I beg pardon, but I didn't quite catch your name."

And then, with freezing distinctness, Judge Martindale announced the gentleman's name and profession. A profusion of apologies followed, repeated to such an extent that the kindly parson soothed him as follows: "Don't worry, sir; don't give it a second thought. When a gentleman tells such a story in my presence I always forget it, and when a blackguard does I never remember it."

Poor Jim! Like the "Lady or the Tiger" story, this was long the puzzle of his life. He asked me once what Reed probably meant, but I closed him under Wild West fiction, which reads that "if any fellow who contumacious of any other fellow he can't answer himself, he is obliged to set 'em up."—Washington Post.

The Doctor's Story. Canon MacColl quotes a remarkable case related to him by a physician who had been a pupil of Sir Charles Bell, the eminent author of "The Bridge and Water Treatise on Hand." The physician used to tell the following story to his class: "A surgeon who went over the field of Waterloo after the battle found a man lying with his scalp cut off by a sabre-stroke. He picked up the scalp, and finding the man breathing but unconscious, he ordered him to be placed among the wounded, clapping at the same time the severed scalp on his head, in order that it might be buried with him, for he did not expect that the poor man would recover. The following day, however, he found the man conscious and the scalp adhering to his head, but the ends reversed, for the surgeon, thinking the man was dying, took no pains to fix the scalp properly. The man recovered, but had to wear his scalp wrong end forward."—London News.

Where Weakness Has Its Birth. Intelligent physicians, regarding with an eye less than favorable the use of narcotics, while there are used in extreme cases to afford greatly needed temporary relief, professional of late have been more generally directed, now a days, to the use of the most powerful of the nerve system as the basis of its healthful quietude. This is one reason why Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, which is a tonic and a blood purifier, is so popular. It is a tonic and a blood purifier, and it is a tonic and a blood purifier.

Who's Who? You cannot always tell what a man is thinking by looking at his face. The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dread disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Dr. Williams' Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure for this disease, the medical fraternity, Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Dr. Williams' Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and curing it in its source. It is a tonic and a blood purifier, and it is a tonic and a blood purifier.

Sixteen World's Fair Photos for One Dime. The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway has made an arrangement with a first-class publishing house to furnish a set of beautiful World's Fair pictures, of a large size, at the nominal cost to the purchaser of only ten cents for a portfolio of sixteen illustrations. Nothing so handsome is offered in the World's Fair has yet been published. The series would be worth at least twelve dollars if the pictures were not published in such large quantities, and we are therefore able to furnish these works of art for only ten cents.

White Slave Murders in Finland. A regular slave mart still exists in many country districts of Finland. Once a year such paupers, aged people, and lunatics as cannot support themselves are put up to public auction and consigned to those people who will board them at the lowest price offered by the parish authorities. The helpless people are made to work as much as possible by the owners, who have the right to chastise them, and who are usually most inhuman in their treatment of the wretched inmates.

The aged folk are physically unable to perform much hard work, but the lunatics, though mentally deranged, are often badly capable of undergoing a great deal of strain. Consequently the farmer shows little mercy toward them, harnesses them to his plows and thrashes them with his whip as if they were oxen, while the piteous appeals and shrieking manderings of the idiots do not tend to soften the blows.—Pearson's Weekly.

The Eyes of Marksmen. Lieut. C. L. Collins, Inspector of Small Arms Practice in the department of the Colorado, says, in his annual report, that the competition in target shooting has shown that men with light blue eyes rank highest, followed in their order by dark blue, slate blue, light brown, dark brown, and black. In the colored troops light blue eyes again stand at the top. How large a proportion of the colored troops have light blue eyes is not stated in the published abstract of his report. Tall men shoot more accurately than the short men.
