THE FIRST ST. PAUL'S.

Begun After London's Great Fire of 1136 and in Ashes After 1666.

The church was begun after the first great fire of 1136, but not finally completed until 1498. The spire was considered the handsomest and was the tallest in Europe, rising to a height of 520 feet above the pavement. On the top was a ball supporting a cross and terminating in an eagle. At the west end of the edifice were two massive towers, one of which contained a lock-up for ecclesiastical offenders and was known as the Lollards' tower. The bishop's palace was on the north side, and behind it was the great church of gray friars, on the site of the choir of which Christ church, Newgate, now stands. At first old St. Paul's had no cloister, but in 1332 the garden of the dean and chapter was taken for the purpose and the roof of the chapter house may be detected rising on the western side of the south transept. There was also a school for the choir boys at the east end.

The interior of the cathedral was very spacious, but was much blocked up with monuments. Those to Sir Phillip Sydney, in the north aisle of the choir near to Sir Francis Walsingham, and one of enormous size to Sir Christopher Hatton, in the south aisle, were there in Shakespeare's time. An older tomb was that of Sir John Beauchamp, popularly believed to be that of Humphrey, duke of Gloucester, who was, however, buried in St. Alban's. "To dine with Duke Humphrey" meant to wander dinnerless in the cathedral nave. St. Paul's was a cathedral of what is known as "the old foundation." In churches of this type there was a dean assisted by canons, who were responsible for daily services. They were not monks, but ordained clergymen, each of them endowed with an estate. Most of these estates were in the neighborhood of London, and the canons, their owners, lived on them as country squires. By degrees they all leased away their prebends, and the modern canons are specially endowed, but without the estates. The edifice was destroyed in the great fire of 1666, when history records that the lead of its roof and rebuilt spire "ran off like water."—Scientific American.

TREASURE PROTECTED BY MUD.

Effort to Be Made to Reach Stored Riches in India.

A good story of hidden treasure comes from India on the authority of the late tutor to the heir apparent of Bhopal.

In the hills of Amarkantak, in the central provinces, close to the sources of the Narbada and the Son, there stands an old deserted fort called Ran Bakall, wherein, so tradition says, are collected vast stores of treasure and jewels formerly the property of the Hindu rajahs of the country, but for ages no one has been able to gain access to the fort because it is surrounded by miles of impassable mud. The late Sir Richard Temple when lieutenant governor of Bengal tried to reach it, but his elephant stuck deep in the mire and he was forced to abandon the quest. It is now suggested that a syndicate should be formed to exploit this treasure house by means of balloons, and a Calcutta capitalist has promised a large subscription toward the enterprise.

The question which puzzles most people is how this ocean of mud ever came to invest the fort. An effort will be made to enlist the co-operation of the maharajah of Rewa, the ruler of the district, who is said to be an enlightened prince, though how it comes that he has not already taken steps to solve the mystery is not stated.

Why Women Tolerate Men.

"You see that old woman and the young one in the corner of the room," said he. "They come here every night for dinner. I don't know whether they are mother and daughter or a rich woman and her attendant, but I wish you could hear their comments upon the men in the place. Critical as to their manners, their looks, their talk. I get quite discouraged when I happen to sit near enough to hear. Ever any man with them? Not that I ever saw, but it is the women who never go with men who are most critical. Those who do are lenient with their little foibles. They excuse them for the sake of whatever good traits they might chance to possess."

A Happier Moment.

"All of us used to be happy when we were going to school."
"That's so; there was only one time we were happier."
"You mean when we were in love?"
"No, I mean when we were going away from school."—Houston Post.

Apple of Eden Not in It.
You find charred pears in the kitchen heaps of middle Europe, where the lake villages used to be. These remnants date back of the apple, and so far as we can discover the pear was the very first one of this wonderful family to become of importance to human beings. In fact, it seems probable that an eatable pear or possibly a cookable pear was in possession of our ancestors a good while before there were eatable apples or even cherries, plums and possibly even strawberries. But the whole pear family was just as surely working up toward civilized and garden conditions as human beings themselves. Evolution has brought us along together, with pretty nearly equal step, and now it looks as if our "future development" was to be nearly as close as our past.—Outing Magazine.
