

The Amen Corner Pew.

It was high two mile to their meetin house, a-counin from our dooryard gate, An sometimes their roads was so rough an bad we didn't get there till late, But Susan an me we allers went, never mind in their mud er their rain, Fer both uv us somehow felt jest like we'd miss what we never could gain. So when I see Susan a-hurryin round an clearin her work away I half way manage ter hold my own an watch ther time uv day, An ther weather might be either wet er dry, but the parson he allers knew He'd hev two hearers let come what may in ther amen corner pew. But some uv ther preachers was awful slow, with a humdrum sort uv style, An when they kept on in this prosy way a considerable spell uv awhile, Then my eyes was a'most sur ter begin ter close, an my thoughts went ramblin tew, An I wonderd if I should go clean off ter sleep what in ther world Susan would do, Fer she'd nudge me right hard in ther side next ter hern an look awfully stern an severe. So ther biggest part uv ther sermon I was almost obleged ter hear. An ther parson, a-seein me nod an drowse afore he's half way through, Would pulp it ther pulpit an fire his points at ther amen corner pew. Ther light that streamd through ther belfry tower in a slantin golden ray Seemed like a part uv heaven come down ter teach us how ter pray, An a solemn hush came on us, an each one bent his head, Fer an angel spoke ther prayer for us, though not a word was said, An then a breath uv gentleness would speak ter our hearts, sayin "Peace," An our loads would commence ter lighten an our fears begin ter cease Till ther golden ladder that Jacob saw right out uv ther altar grew, An 'twas next to heaven for Susan an me in ther amen corner pew. Ther parson would read ther hymn ter us in a voice 'at was deep an clear, An he seemed so solemn an earnestlike we couldn't help but hear. An then he pitched ther tune fer us, 'twas ther good old hymns we sung, With each one joinin hearty till ther old church fairly rung. An outside in ther tree tops ther birds took up ther strain An chirped an twittered an warbled a soft an sweet refrain, While our voices soared up higher in the song we each one knew, An Susan she sung ther sweetest uv all in ther amen corner pew. -Walter S. Stranahan in Chicago Record.
