WHEELING, VA: THURSDAY MORNING, MAY 8, 1856.

For the Wheeling Intellig THE DIME SAVINGS INSTITU-TION OF WHEELING. At the last session of the General Assembly of Virginia, an act was passed, chartering "The Dime Savings Institution of Wheeling."

The primary object of this Institution is to foster and encourage provident habits and moral sentiments in a community; by inducing the investment of small sums of money, that are the savings of sobriety, industry and economy, and affording a safe and profitable place of keeping such sums, as the widow, the orphan, the apprentice, the clerk, the mechanic, or the reformed and reclaimed victims of vice and crime may accumulate, to meet the exigencies and casualities of life. Also to afford a safe place to keep and deposit, legacies, bequests and donations, the proceeds of which are designed to be appropriated to the charities of life.

What financial, benevolent, or charitable institution can commend itself more justly to the citizen ! Its claims are alike on the generous and mercenary; by fostering the public interests of our people and reducing the burthens that oppress and distress so many. It will reduce taxation by lessening the pauperism of the community, in reducing the number of gamblers, idlers, criminals, and dissipated ones that so often are precipitated on society for their maintenance and punishment, by affording an inducement to earn and deposit, the returns of a life of industry, sobriety and honesty.

This institution is no small concern, its distinctive feature is, that the limit of its usefulness is not prescribed; while it receives the min imum deposit of a dime, to accommodate and benefit that large class whose means are meagre, still these means, in the aggregate, accumulate to an immense sum, and as there is no maximum to limit the amount of the deposit or investment, these, blended and united, combine an interest that furnishes a capital for a large and most profitable business, in a community such as ours.

The savings in these institutions are often, very often indeed, the beginnings of the young, the thrifty and the industrious, and that results in independence and affluence, and secures all the comforts that make old age comfortable and life agreeable.

I hope the Commissioners who have been appointed to put this institution in operation, who are J. M. Todd, I. W. Mitchel, Benj. Exley, John Zoeckler, J. H. Stout, F. Folmer, J. Knote, J-Hornbrook, --- Stroble, --- Garrison, A. J. Pannell, F. Mozier, J. Frissell, A. Bedillion, I. Cooper and G. A. Cracraft, will embark in the undertaking of the institution, and that they may engage the earnest and active co-operation of the citizens; that all may be done that can be; to make our city the pride of our people and the glory of Virginia.

GEORGE WHITEHILL. A hellling sketch BY LALLA LINWGOD.

Thus men go wrong with an ingenious skill, Bend the taught rule to their own crooked will

To muse over the prominent incidents of our early life, and those of our young friends, to whom we were affectionately allied, attracts no inconsiderable portion of thought, through the sterner years of manhood and age," said a gentlemen who was relating the reminiscences of his early youth. "Memory," continued he, "treasures up early recollections of home and friends; and those of the good and gentle nature are the more firmly engraven on her tableau." About the year 1830, circumstances peculiar to the orphan state, caused me to leave home, friends, and all the cherished scenes of childhood, for a strange people. I parted with every dear object with regret, and longed for my old home again. Among all my young friends, George Whitehill was the star of my affections. We were born in the same village, and were playmates and friends in childhood and youth. Scarcely a day passed that we were not in each other's company. Wherever his merry ringing voice was heard, there was I to answer. One had no sunshine, no shade, no joy, no hope, without the other shared it. We were friends linked together-pledged friends forever. After an absence of four years, I received a pressing invitation from George to visit his home, and engage in a deer hunt, a sport to which he had become greatly attached. I anxiouslylooked forward to the first of December, the time appointed, and, with many bright prospects in view, I set out to meet him. When I reached his mother's cottage, George was waiting to receive me. I can never forget the warm pressure of his hand, nor the kind words and looks that greeted me. But something strange was in his manner that startled me. It is true he had grown in form, with a face beautiful, and bluer and brighter eves never met mine. His words were pure, but full of laughing eloquence. But then I saw at a glance, that a change had swept over him, and it pained me to believe, that he was sipping poison and death from the reeling and blighting cup. I knew his nature so well that I at once opened the subject; and he frankly owned his fault, and promised that after we had finished the deer chase, he would then forever relinquish an appetite that had caused him and his friends much regret and misery. I said no more, but thanked him for the blessed hope he gave me. Never shall I forget the glad smile and kind looks his fond mother and affectionate sister gave me, when they heard George promise me to forsake his intemperate habits that were gradually gaining strength. His mother was one of those dear old ladies who are so perfectly nest and plain, with a countenance of so much goodness, that the appellation of mother rose to the Hos of every one by whom she was addressed; and his sister was a gentle, delicate girl, of such fragile beauty that she was petted and tenderly cared for by those who surrounded her. Her brother was the pride of her heart, and she had pleaded with all the tearful eloquence that belongs to the gentler sex, until hope died within her heart. Bowing her head upon my hand, she murmured, "exert your kindly influence over my brother," but ere she could speak another word, George exclaimed:

"Come, cheer up, Nelly, and don't look so heart broken;" then pressing her head between his hands, he imprinted a kiss on her cheek .-"Look, Nelly," he continued, "you have bathed the hand of our friend with tears, but never sound, you shall not have cause to shed any more, for I intend to be as temperate in future as the Sower that sigs the dow, and then you will be gread of me, wont you Nelly? and so will you, louz-year.
