A Southbound freight train on the Frisco was derailed at Little Rock early Monday morning when the engine crew failed to interpret signals given by Towerman Sam Beauchamp on the crossing semaphore. Had the derail attachment failed to work the Southbound train on the Frisco would have collided with an engine dragging five cars up the incline track on the Illinois Southern causing a wreck in which there might have been some loss of life. The train was running 15 miles an hour when the engine struck the derail. The engine, tender and four cars were derailed, and one car completely overturned. A car containing several head of stock was among the cars derailed, and one horse was so severely injured that it was necessary to place it in care of our local veterinary surgeon Joseph Jacobs for treatment. The wreck was cleared up about 1:30 p. m. and traffic resumed.
