LOVE CAME BACK AT TWILIGHT.

The Little Old Lady Who Tended Her Flower Garden During All the Years "Their Ways Were Parted"—and Waited—Saw the Lover of Her Younger Days Return to Be the Lover of Her Fading Hours.

Special Correspondence.
ATLANTA, Ga., July 28.—For 18 years Mrs. Louisa Oregon Chisolm Parker cultivated her sweet peas and fine shrubbery around her little cottage in College Park, Ga., and sold them to flower-lovers there and in the

She went her way and he went his. Recently they met for the first time since their separation. Coming to Atlanta from Jacksonville, Fla., on business, he entered an office and there she sat. Their eyes met. "Howdy," he stammered. "Howdy, Mr. Parker," she replied.

neighboring big city of Atlanta. Her business card read merely "L. O. Parker". The community knew her however, as a lonesome and lovable, little old lady who talked not at all about her own intimate affairs and whose interest seemed to be solely in her beautiful flowers. For 18 years (the same 18) E. A. Parker, formerly of Barnesville, Ga., dealt successfully in blooded horses, farming lands and city real estate. Eighteen years ago Mrs. Parker and her husband agreed to disagree. Eleven years of married life had demonstrated that they could not be happy together—or so they thought, at least. They separated.

quite calmly. Mrs. Parker's hair was gray, and there were wrinkles in her face that had not been there 18 years ago. Mr. Parker's hair and beard had grown white. But that look into each other's eyes took no account of years. It set an old ache athrob in the heart of each of them. Mr. Parker sat down beside her—and she made room for him as demurely as she did in the days of their courting in Barnesville, Ga., long ago. He accompanied her home on the trolley car. She showed him the flower gardens and then sent him back to town. Next day he called again. The neighbors were interested. "Some old sweetheart," they told each other with smiles and nods. They were astounded when Mrs. Parker inroduced him among them a few days later. "It's Mr. Parker," said she, "my husband! I wasn't a widow and I wasn't divorced. We are married just as tight now as we were 20 years ago. And we've agreed to agree hereafter." The little cottage, with the sweet peas in full bloom and the shrubbery growing thick around it, took on a romantic air, even if the happy couple did go away at once on their second honeymoon. "I had to court her again, harder than I did the first time," Mr. Parker declared before they left. "And I had to compromise, anyhow." "We're going to spend the winter in Florida, but she says we must make this our summer home, so she can look after the flowers." And, really, I don't object much."

ting a square deal as any wage worker of other cities.

In pointing to the good accomplished by Billy Sunday, in the lives of many of the people of South Bend, he referred to his text, saying, "by their fruits ye shall know them." He pictured the changed lives of numerous people here and said that the man who had experienced a new life is well worth all the cost of the meetings.

Has Watched City. He said in part: "I have watched the immense growth of your city for many years as its industries have unfolded themselves, and have watched with pride the growth of its social conditions and government development. The charter of your city places practically unlimited power of the building up or the tearing down in the hands of the mayor. It places the handling of the city affairs in the hands of four boards, which are the board of public safety, the board of public works, the school board and the park board. The officials and members of these boards are appointed by the mayor, who in the last analysis is the invisible government."

He then urged the importance of selecting a man for the office who is capable and qualified in every way. He showed how the selection of the proper man would encourage higher development, advance social conditions and would attract people to come to this city and make their homes here.

"But the man whose character is perfumed with honor, whose picture I see everywhere, in the office by backing him with your Christian vote," he continued. "Select a gentleman whose record is read in the history of the city."

He said that if the wrong man was selected enforcement of the laws would rest in his hands for the dives, saloons and other fountains of corruption would depend on his action for bringing such vile institutions under as much decency as is possible.

highest type citizen is elected to administer in the capacity of mayor, it will continue to grow in wealth and greatness," said he.

SHE HAS NO CHARLIE, AND BURGLAR FLEES

NEW YORK, July 28.—Mrs. Ellnor Hole awoke very early Sunday in her home at 123 River road, Passiac, N. J., and in the moonlight saw a man groping around the room. She was much scared, but managed to say sturdily:

"What are you doing here?" "Oh, go to sleep," the man retorted, with a sort of gruff good nature. "I'm Charlie."

"But," cried the astounded matron, "my husband's name is Leonard." Then she jumped right out of bed and screamed "Burglars!" out of the open window. And the burglar jumped right out of the door and down the stairs and out of the house. And husband Leonard by that time was awake and phoned to the police. "Charlie" took with him silver spoons valued at $3.

LISTS SOUTH BEND AS AMONG FINEST

Dr. W. H. Hickman Deals With Local Conditions in His Sermon at the First Methodist Church.

"South Bend is one of the finest and best cities in the middle west," said Dr. W. H. Hickman, in a sermon at the First Methodist church Sunday evening, when he occupied the pulpit in the absence of the pastor, Rev. Henry L. Davis. Dr. Hickman was pastor of the First M. E. church of this city several years ago, and afterwards chancellor of Depauw university and later connected with the Old National Chautauqua of New York. Since he left the city he has always been more or less in touch with conditions here. Dr. Hickman chose his subject, "By their fruits ye shall know them," from Christ's sermon on the mount, Matt. 7:20. He pointed with pride to conditions here, to the large industries located here and said that the wage-earner of the city comes as near get-
